BEAUTY'S DEFENSE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY OSCAR WEISS.

They tell us beauty's but skin deep,
And will not wear;
That smiles their sweetness will not keep,
That eyes that laugh the soonest weep,
And foul is fair,

That homely is the true-love sign—
The lovely ne'er;
They warn the swain 'gainst traits divine,
And urge him hence from beauty's shrine
To hideous fair.

A word for beauty let me say
As bold as true:
All's not skin deep, nor flies away
When sorrow clouds Love's sunny day—
It runs all through.

* * * * * *

Many a gem that Time has tried
Beneath his wheel to wear
Has through the test come purified,
With all its glitter there.

Full many a beauty glows to-day,
Undimmed by woes of life.
The maiden charm has worn away,
Yet left the lovely wife.

Say not that beauty's but veneer—
The saying is untrue;
I know a beauty I hold dear
That wears a lifetime through.

DOUBLY EXPIATED.

THE TRUE STORY OF A HIPPODROME TRAGEDY.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY NATHAN D. URNER.

One of the distinguishing characteristics of Mlle. Fanny Gyika, the beautiful ecuyere, or lady rider, who came to so tragic an end in the Paris Hippodrome about eighteen months ago, was the wearing of a Countess' coronet embroidered on her saddle and trappings; many being so envious as to declare that this distinction had been assumed with the same readiness that so often transforms a commonplace Biddy Muggins into a Celestine De Rosecouleur for stage purposes.

Death, however, rudely tore aside the veil, and the unfortunate lady proved not only to have been a real Countess, but the wife of a very eminent and wealthy nobleman holding a very important appointment at Bucharest. He was present at the funeral, and took greatly to heart the death of the lady, who was only twenty-three, and at the very zenith of her beauty and fame, when she met with the accident that ended so fatally.

But there is yet more to be told of her romantic and erratic history. In the first place, her circus name, that of Fanny Gyika, was also her real one, such having been her own true gipsy name at the time of her changing it, at the age of seventeen, for that of the Count von Steilnitz.

Her father was the chief, or king, of a large band of horse-trading Hungarian gipsies, and Fanny at an early age became a striking feature at nearly all of the horse-fairs of her native country, Austria and Croatia, not only by reason of her superb, precociously-matured beauty, but likewise because of her horsewomanship, which was most wonderful, and contributed not a little to the horse-trading successes of her father and his tribe.

The Count von Steilnitz first met her at a fair in the vicinity of Pesth, where he was quartered as a young officer of cavalry, his fine estate being situated in the mountains not many leagues away.

For him to see was to love—deeply, madly, absolutely—for she was at that time in the ravishing heydey of her youthful charms. He lost no time in seeking an interview with her in the midst of the gipsy camp as soon as the fair was concluded. Costly gifts accompanied the interview, and he besought her to fly with him at once, promising, as an equivalent, to throw up his commission without delay and to bear her off to a remote castle of his on the Bohemian frontier, there to spend the remainder of his days in administering to her desires.

But the gipsy princess was not to be won in this way. She coldly refused everything short of actual marriage, but, nevertheless, accepted his presents and did not forbid him to call again.

Many interviews succeeded the first. He really did throw up his military commission, and, thoroughly infatuated, he finally followed her everywhere, even masquerading as a gipsy himself in order not to be separated from her. She still remained cunningly obdurate, however, and at last he was led up to the culmination of idiocy by offering to make her his Countess.

Even then the fair Fanny presented a certain coyness in accepting the unheard-of honor for one of her vagabond race.

"Ah, Ulric," said she demurely, "I cannot doubt your love, your devotion; but still I fear that I should not be happy, even as your Countess. I will require the unlimited freedom from conventionalities to which I have been accustomed."

He swore that no restraint should ever be put upon her, if she would but marry him.

"But I will require to ride as I choose—on the maddest steeds—without bridle or bit—if the humor possesses me, as it now so often does."

"Only let me accompany you, and I reck not if you lead me the Wild Huntsman's route!" he exclaimed.

"But my relatives—I will require that they shall freely visit me when they chance in the vicinity of our castle, Ulric."

He made a slight grimace; but his infatuation was complete, and he consented to even this.

"But there is one thing more, my darling Ulric. I will require that Black Enoch, my foster-brother, my childhood's companion, shall accompany us wherever we may go."

The Count's brow darkened. This was at first too much for even his self-delusion. Black Enoch was a handsome gipsy of about his own age, quietly desperate in character, the terror of his Romany compatriots, and well known to have been the favorite aspirant for the Princess Fanny Gyika's hand and heart before the interposition of the young Hungarian, with his infinitely more dazzling inducements. He was also a wonderful horseman, and in this respect had often companioned the sylph-like equestrienne in her most daring flights along the course.

"The deuce! but you ask an impossibility—an absurdity, my angel!" growled Ulric. "The fellow is known to have been my rival; the selfish hope of worldly advantage through your connection with me alone deters him from dirking me."

She shook her head.

"You mistake his delightful character," she said; "and I cannot prove an ingrate to my poor foster-brother. It is for your sake, Ulric, that I thrust him out of my heart; ask me not that I shall also thrust him out of my friendship. It is for your sake that I have given up the darling scheme that he and I once cherished in common of joining some circus troupe and winning wealth and fame on horseback. It would be utterly heartless for me to abandon Black Enoch altogether. I cannot do it, even for your sake, much as I adore you. He must go with us."

He stormed, entreated, expostulated, but to no purpose; the siren's determination was unshaken, and at last, in the acme of his infatuation, he agreed to this condition, in addition to the others that she had imposed.

To the scandal of Count von Steilnitz's relatives and friends the gipsy princess and he were publicly married at a suburban chapel of the Hungarian capital in the following week.

The honeymoon was as brief and bitter as might have been expected.

After a fortnight's sojourn in Vienna, where the strangely-mated pair were studiously avoided by all the wealthy and titled families that had formerly been on the young nobleman's visiting-list, and where the couple were further embarrassed by being completely overrun, day in and day out, and from morning to night, by the outlandish relatives and friends of the gipsy bride, under the encouragement and example of Black Enoch, who had constituted himself a sort of major-domo, or second fiddle to the connubial extravaganza, did nothing but feast and carouse at the miserable bridegroom's expense, the latter, seeing his error when too late, carried off his Countess to the most remote and desolate of his numerous estates, where, mountain-buried, he perhaps trusted to enjoy unmolestedly the rough gem that had cost him so dear, or at least hide his disgrace from the carping criticism of the society he had so wantonly defied.

But there was no more rest for the foolish than for the wicked in this case. This sort of seclusion by no means accorded with the tastes of my lady, the new-fledged Countess; and, moreover, true to the ridiculous agreement, Black Enoch accompanied them.

The mountain roads were so little frequented that neither she nor her precious foster-brother could very well scandalize the Count by whatever horseback-performances either chose to attempt; so they resorted to something else. Whatever it was has never exactly been made known, but a violent scene one evening occurred on the terrace of the castle, in which the Count, notwithstanding his young bride's screams, promptly knocked down her foster-brother with the butt of a heavy riding-whip, and was giving him a most unmerciful castigation, that was only ended by the Countess dragging him back when the gipsy had regained his feet and dangerously wounded the Count with a dagger-thrust.

Black Enoch had then darted away into the forest and disappeared, while the Count was carried to his bed by his servants.

The next morning it became evident that the infatuated young nobleman's disgrace was complete. It was then developed that the Countess had fled during the night, presumably in Black Enoch's company, and with her had disappeared two thoroughbred steeds, the pick of the castle-stables, and all the Steilnitz family jewels, together with such ready-money as she had been enabled to lay her hands on.

Recovering from his wound in the course of a few months, Count von Steilnitz returned to Vienna a sadder and wiser man, resolved to forget his worthless wife if possible, and make the most of what might remain of his shattered opportunities. His friends and relatives welcomed him with open arms and generous hearts. An excellent diplomatic position was secured for him, first at Pottsdam and then at Bucharest, in the hope of permanently curing him of the effects of his infatuation.

But the poison had gone deeper than they imagined. He was constantly on the alert to find some traces of his fugitive Countess, and he would quit his post by fits and starts in the hope of finding out her whereabouts, and wreaking his revenge upon the companion of her flight.

At last he heard of a gloriously beautiful girl and a handsome man who were traveling with a circus troupe in Bavaria, and astonishing the inhabitants of that country with their wonderful feats of horsemanship. They bore names that were strange to him, but he doubted not from the public descriptions furnished that they were the pair for whom he was in search. Obtaining a leave-of-absence from his diplomatic duties, he hastened in pursuit, accompanied by only one servant.

Arriving at Munich, where the troupe were performing, he speedily informed himself that his suspicions had been founded in fact. At the end of the performance he marched boldly into the dressing-room, collared the astonished gipsy, and then and there—his faithful servant meanwhile keeping the rest of the performers at bay at the point of the revolver—subjected him to such a mauling with a bludgeon as it is the fortune of few rascals to receive and live through.

As it was, Black Enoch was hopelessly crippled and otherwise injured. Finally, believing that he had beaten his victim to death, in accordance with his design, the indignant husband had cast the limp, disfigured and mutilated form at the feet of the trembling Countess and sternly walked away, accompanied by his servant. They had taken their measures for escape beforehand, and succeeded in doing so with but little difficulty; the authorities taking but little interest in the affair after certain explanations, which occurred soon afterwards.

Black Enoch did not die, however. He finally recovered in a measure, though crippled for life, and with his occupation gone. His mistress, unprincipled as she was, had probably always loved him, and she did not desert him now. The exposures incidental to the affair had hopelessly ruined her prospects in Bavaria. But she took him with her, and, boldly changing her nom de guerre for the one she had borne before her mad marriage, she took up and continued her line of success in other countries, and with other troupes that were glad enough to avail themselves of her attainments.

A haunting dread of the Count von Steilnitz, however, was now ever present in the thoughts of the guilty pair. They had had proofs enough of his revengeful nature to know that they could no longer afford to deride the man whom they had so outraged and wronged. They felt certain that the Count would renew his pursuit and complete his savage purpose should it come to his knowledge that he had only succeeded in maiming, instead of killing, his gipsy enemy. Enoch, therefore, wholly changed both his assumed name and his facial appearance to the best of his power, and it was agreed between him and the Countess that he should never miss an attendance upon her performances, when the one who should first chance to detect the Count's ominous presence among the spectators should apprise the other to that effect by a significant sign, and then be on their guard to renew their flight in each other's company at the earliest opportunity.

With this haunting dread overhanging her otherwise lucrative and brilliant career, Mademoiselle Fanny Gyika, the gipsy queen of horsewomen, blazed through Prussia, Belgium and the Low Countries like a veritable comet of success, and finally, about a year ago, reached the zenith of her professional ambition by becoming the recognized star of the Paris Hippodrome, and the lauded equestrian wonder of the world's fashionable capital.

But her vanity at this point got the better of her prudence. She had her Countess' coronet elegantly emblazoned on her horse's trappings, and this notwithstanding that she still dreaded the avenger, and that her lover still accompanied her almost everywhere, as a veritable bait for the avenging swoop.

This was finally the cause of the catastrophe that led to her death, as well as that of her lover.

One evening, after a particularly brilliant exhibition, Mademoiselle Gyika was galloping around the arena, on her favorite charger Sultan, for the purpose of receiving the applauding acknowledgments of a vast concourse of spectators, when the watchful glance of her guilty confederate, who was in a seat overlooking the arena-rail, suddenly espied the threatening face of Count von Steilnitz among the front ranks on the opposite side.

In his fright he leaped up, and, leaning forward, flaunted a handkerchief directly in the face of the charger just as he was careering with his fair rider past the spot.

The ill-judged warning was fatal to both giver and recipient. As the lover turned to decamp, after making the signal, he lost his balance, stumbled backward, and plunged headlong with a cry over the rail. At the same instant the startled steed shied and reared violently, unseating his rider, and coming down crushingly with both forefeet on the skull of the man who had fallen into his path. Then he dashed madly away, dragging Mlle. Gyika after him, her foot having caught fast in the stirrup.

When rescued and conveyed in a senseless condition to the hospital it was found that she had sustained a compound fracture of the ankle, which would necessitate an amputation of the limb at the knee, if her life was to be saved.

Though suffering excruciatingly, the unfortunate woman's first question upon coming to her senses was concerning the man who had fallen under Sultan's hoofs. Upon being informed that he had been taken up quite dead, she shuddered convulsively, and groaned out: "C'est juste—c'est en effet une double expiation!" as she turned away her head.

She steadfastly refused to undergo the proposed amputation, preferring death, which supervened, through mortification of the injured limb, two days later. Her much-wronged husband is said to have visited and freely forgiven her before her death, and it is well known that he was present at her funeral.

Would he have figured in either event but for the catastrophe having also compassed the death of the miserable lover—but for the double expiation that had chanced?

It is extremely doubtful; but, at all events, such was a fitting and retributive end for the wild gipsy Countess.

SETTING THE THAMES ON FIRE.

A remarkable instance of an error arising from similarity in sound is in the phrase "setting the Thames on fire." The substitution of the name of a river for the correct word entirely deprives the expression of any meaning, and so general has the error become that, foolish though the mistake is, it is perhaps useless to attempt to restore the true signification of the saying, which, like many others, is traceable to the domestic pursuits of our forefathers before machinery did so much of their work. Many years ago, before machinery was introduced into flour-mills for the purpose of sifting flour, it was the custom of the miller to send it away unsifted. The process of sifting was done at home, thus: The temse, or sieve, which was moved with a rim that projected from the bottom of it, was worked over the mouth of the barrel into which the flour or meal was sifted. The active fellow who worked hard not unfrequently set the rim on fire by force of friction against the rim of the flour-barrel; so that this department of domestic employment became a standard by which to test a man's will and capacity to work hard. Thus of a lazy fellow, or one deficient in strength, it was said he "will never set the temse on fire." The word is still in common use in Lincolnshire to signify the sieve used by brewers to remove the hops from the beer.—English Exchange.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

NO REPLIES BY MAIL OR TELEGRAPH.

☞ QUESTIONS THAT DO NOT REACH THIS OFFICE UNTIL TUESDAY MORNING WILL NOT BE ANSWERED UNTIL THE FOLLOWING WEEK.

J. R. K., Bath.—1. Engine No. 1 had a perfect right to challenge the holder of a prize which was open to challenge by any steamer in the State. 2, 3, 4. Neither company had the absolute right to fix the date and place of trial, which in the absence of anything bearing on the matter in the original conditions should be settled by mutual agreement. Failing to agree, the companies should refer the question to the tournament committee for settlement. The rules should have contained a clause specifying the length of time that was to elapse before a company, after winning, could be obliged to accept a challenge; also, within what period after receipt of challenge the match should be contested. 5. Under the rules, as published, no other than the challenged and the first challenging steamer would have the right to compete, unless they mutually agreed to admit other companies to the competition. 6. The company holding the cup should accept the challenge which first came to their notice. 7. The challenges hold good. 8. As the amount of steam is not limited by the rules, each engineer is allowed to use as much as he pleases; but of course the competing companies can mutually agree on a certain amount if they so desire. In such a contest, however, each engine should be allowed to work up to its full capacity. 9. We see nothing improper about either challenge, as the rules did not specify in what way they should be sent, and each of the challenging parties doubtless adopted what they considered the proper method. If the committee who had charge of the tournament would take the matter under consideration and make amends for past shortcomings by drafting a proper set of rules for the government of future matches, a deal of trouble may be avoided.

DAN, Stuyvesant.—1. You do not have to put back [a ball when you knock an object-ball off the table at pool. 2. You have no right to mark the cloth or anything else about the table, at any kind of billiards, as a guide to play. 3. Because no rules are needed. The so-called pyramid pool played here is the same as ordinary pool, save that eight balls make game, instead of 61 in balls, and that a ball goes back, instead of a player being marked three off. 3. There is only one difficulty in the way of anybody's establishing his own rules as to playing pool or any other game, or as to the use he proposes, for the matter of that, to make of other people's property. It requires the assent of other people. 4. Joseph Coburn is forty-eight years old. 5 and 6. See answers in amusement columns. 7. Trinket has a record of 2:14. 8. John L. Sullivan's height, without shoes, is 5ft. 10½in. 9. It would require too much research to obtain that information, and it is not worth the trouble. 10. According to the articles of agreement, they are to fight on Sept. 11 next.

L. Z. B., Bradford.—To perspire and to transpire mean the one thing. Neither means to sweat, for perspiration and sweat are not identical. Both transpire and perspire are from the Latin. The "spire" is from spiro, breathe; per is "to," and trans is "over" or "beyond." Were sweating meant, the root would be sudo, which is Latin for sweat. Transudation is sweating. The idea that transpire does not mean the same as perspire in its relation to the moisture from the human pores comes from a misuse of the former word, resulting from a popular misapprehension of some such sentence as this originally written by a scholar: "Nothing has since transpired in relation to the matter." This scholar did not mean that nothing had happened, or occurred, or taken place. He meant that if anything had happened or taken place its nature had not been made public—it had not been breathed forth, or over or beyond a certain circle.

O. L.—1. The Boston team of 1872 included: Spalding, pitcher; McVey, catcher; Gould, Barnes and Schafer on the bases; Geo. Wright, short-stop; Leonard, Harry Wright and Rogers in the outfield; and Birdsall, substitute. In 1873 Jim White, O'Rourke and Manning took the places of McVey, Gould and Rogers. Bob Addy alternated with Manning at right-field in the latter part of that season. 2. The Cincinnati team in 1870 were: Brainard, pitcher; Allison, catcher; Gould, Sweasy and Waterman on the bases; Geo. Wright, short stop; Leonard, H. Wright and McVey in the outfield; and Dean and Atwater, substitutes. 3. The Mutual nine in 1871 were: Walters, pitcher; Mills, catcher; Start, Ferguson and Smith on the bases; Pearce, short-stop; and Hatfield, Eggler and Higham in the outfield.

C. P. M., Cleveland.—It depends upon the wording of the bet. See answer to "J. C. W., Cleveland." The trouble with many persons is that they assume to be better posted than they are. Thus you ask: "Would not that be a draw, the same as all bets or ties?" You can go out upon the turf and lose all the money you can muster by wagering it on a heat that turns out to be a dead one; or, if you bet $10,000 to a dollar, it is possible for you to get but five thousand dollars and fifty cents back. Again, if D had thrown 10 at dice, and you had then bet that you would beat him, you would lose if you threw 10; and yet there has unquestionably been a tie here.

J. M., St. Mary's.—We cannot decide this until the parties have agreed upon what they mean by a park. There are landowners both here and in Europe with thousands upon thousands of acres that they can and do call parks. There are cultivated parks and uncultivated parks. The largest cultivated park in this country is Central Park. Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, is much larger; but it is far from being all cultivated. The Yellowstone may be regarded as a park in name only.

BOTHERSOME ADDIE, Denver.—1. Instead of all being white-haired and pink-eyed, the natives of Madagascar are almost uniformly black-haired and hazel-eyed. 2. Save in isolated cases, or in such divergences as the quaffing of human blood and the drinking of human gall, cannibalism may be said to have become one of the lost arts. 3. As to the Zulus, there are many animals whose food, regarded by other people as toothsome, they themselves will not touch.

B. C. O., Baltimore.—1. The scores of said games are given this week. 2. The Stars are not in existence. 3. At the commencement of the season the Springfield team included Sullivan, Baldwin, Stapleton, Gunning, Hengel, Cailigan, Jones, Jas. Manning, C. F. Householder and Ellick. The Toledo team: Parsons, Morton, Burkett, Foorman, Miller, Tilley, Walker, Piggott, Ingraham, Barkley and Moffett. Several changes have been made since then in both nines.

A AND B., Hartford.—A does not win. The game played was not the one comprehended by the bet. When that is played the bet will be decided, unless it was made as to a game the bettors then knew was to be played on a certain day. If that day has passed, the bet is off. But it is not off merely because the manager of the baseball ground "declared all bets off." He has nothing to do with deciding other people's bets.

F. P. S., Toronto.—The plural of money is moneys. Were money spelled "mony," its plural form would be "monies." That is the rule here. The plural is often written and printed "monies," especially in legal documents and in commercial circles. There may be authority for this exceptional usage, aside from usage itself; but, if there is, we do not know its nature.

J. C. W., Cleveland.—You are careful to tell us what it was that C. M. bet, but you do not say what it was that J. D. bet. If you wish us to guess that J. D. bet that the Cleveland Club would not lose more games than they won, then J. D. wins. J. D. had to bet expressly that they would win more games than they would lose in order for him to be held to have meant that.

L. E., Philadelphia.—A loses. It will not do for him to say now that he meant the letter I. The time for him to have said that was when he was proposing the bet. He meant B to understand that he had meant B by "you." Besides, this was a reasonable interpretation of A's language, and A must stand by it. The biter has been bitten.

TEDDY, Fall River.—1. The Bradley who pitched for the Bostons is not the same player who pitched for the New Bedfords. We believe the former player once pitched for the Live Oaks of Lynn. He is now a League umpire. 2. It is a matter of opinion. See the pitching-averages at the close of the baseball season.

P. J. M., Isleboro.—1. Spalding's Baseball Guide for 1883 will give you the names and addresses of the different professional clubs. 2. An advertisement might procure you an engagement for next season. All the professional clubs are supplied at present with short-stops.

OAKLAND.—1. The Philadelphia-Providence game of July 4 is counted in making up the averages. 2. On account of our custom in calling a base on balls a time at the bat. 3. According to the local scorer's opinion.

M. O. G., Newark.—Under the rules of the American Association he can, unless he returns to his base on the run. The League rules require that the ball be first held by the pitcher standing in his position.

C. S. A., Lawton.—1. A alone was out, having failed to take his position at the bat in his order of batting. 2. The player following the one who has completed the last time at the bat in the preceding inning.

CONSTANT READER, Fall River.—If C can make high, low and game, his high will put him out, provided the game is nine. Jack cannot count until high and low have been counted, no matter when it was made.

M. AND S.—It denotes that the spider had fired of the ceiling and wished to change its quarters. If you meant to ask what superstitious folks think it means, every community of such folks has its own special interpretation, and no one of them can be right.

CONSTANT READER, Hartford.—1. Neither can be declared out without being touched by the ball in the hands of a fielder while off his base. 2. No one is out. If the catcher had touched B with the ball he would have been the only one out.

ATHLETIC, Philadelphia.—The Athletics beat the Cincinnatis May 29, 31, June 2[illegible] by the respective scores of 2 to 1, 8 to 7, and 14 to 5. The Cincinnatis defeated the Athletics May 30, June 18, 19, 20 by scores of 10 to 9, 6 to 0, 7 to 0, and 11 to 1.

T. H. P.—It is seven-spot was high; he makes high and low. You are careful to avoid asking the very thing you wish to find out about.

PAROLE.—No. Only three-year-olds are eligible to compete for the Epsom Derby Stakes. Parole was five years old when he was sent to England, in the Fall of 1878.

J. G. L., Springfield.—E. Hanlan, G. H. Hosmer and G. W. Lee, Watkins, N. Y.; C. E. Courtney, Union Springs, N. Y.; J. A. Kennedy, Washington, D. C.; Wallace Ross, St. John, N. B.

J. F. M.—From your statement we are of the opinion that the contract is binding on the player, and that Secretary Williams should see that your club has proper redress in the matter.

S. S.—The burden of proof is upon neither in the case of a bet. The obligation rests upon one to disprove by implication as much as the obligation to positively prove rests upon the other.

F. AND H., Baltimore.—So far as your statement contains anything to suggest the contrary, a man has the right to suggest to another that he make a jackpot at poker.

W. H. P., Waterbury.—You lose, if it is left to our decision. As fractional parts of a run cannot be scored, 2 to 0 is not at the rate of four to one.

NEWARK.—A could not make four. There could be two lone hands at a time at regular euchre. A had nothing to gain by going alone.

W. H. D., Elmira.—1. We have no recollection of any such games between professional clubs. 2. That is not the way professional clubs arrange their order of batting.

G. V., Chester.—The Eastons do not deny having been beaten once by the Houston Club. It is a mistake on your part.

C. B., Omaha.—1. A having shown three kings, B having pronounced them good, and A having taken in the pot, it is too late for B to claim the money by showing four-of-a-kind. If he saw the fours before, he deserves to be punished for his tomfoolery; if he did not see them until someone called his attention to them, he is not entitled to the pot, because no one had the right to call his attention to them to the prejudice of A; and if he saw them without outside aid, he must stand the consequences of his own mistake in giving a decision as to A's hand without knowing what his own contained. 2. A club of the Northwestern League has a colored pitcher.

B. B., Jamestown.—1. J. H. McLaughlin has been defeated in more than one wrestling-contest. 2. We have never seen a triple-somerset turned; but we cannot decide that it has not been, in the face of the fact that there are men who claim that they have seen it done publicly. There are experienced men in the circus business who question that it has ever been done successfully in public, and who have never seen it done even in private. You had better draw.

J. D. H., Plainville.—1. The umpire's decision was wrong in the case of the foul-ball, unless you were playing under League rules. In that event the base-runner also was not out, but was obliged to return to the base he had vacated. 2. The Stars were the winners on account of the Monitors refusing to continue the game. The umpire was justified in deciding both men out, and the claim that two runs instead of outs should be scored is an absurd one.

R. E. B.—1. Hanlan was never beaten by Teemer. He has only met the latter in races at Pullman, Ill., and Lake Minnetonka, Minn. 3. Jim Mace was beaten in the P. R. by John Pratt, Bob Brettle and Tom King; defeated Pratt, Harvey, Elliott, Slack, Thorpe, Brettle, Price, Travers, Hurst, King, Goss (twice) and Allen; and fought draws with Goss and Coburn.

JACK, Troy.—1. No. It was another player of the same name. 2. Not that we are aware of. Miller is the better boxer of the two. 3. We do not know the salaries received by those players. 4. They engaged in what was advertised as a blackened-glove match at Irving Hall, this city. It was simply a pawing affair, on which no money was at stake.

T. H. G.—Any one of three decisions can be given. Whatever is given must be an arbitrary one. Questioning that this is a bet of the slightest importance, and believing that you are merely curious to see how we might be disposed to treat an old-time "landlord's game," we prefer not to give any decision at all.

D., Washington.—The Alida was a fast boat. Boats of her class, time and line of service were forced. There is no conclusive reason for believing that normally she was quite so fast as the Mary Powell is, notwithstanding that there has meanwhile been but little improvement in the beam-engine.

J. C. G., Salt Lake City.—The editions of "Spalding's Baseball Guide" for 1878, 1879 and 1880 contained instructions in curve-pitching. You might procure a copy by addressing the publishers, 108 Madison street, Chicago, Ill.

T. E. S., Brooklyn.—It is a standard rule that straights do not play at poker. We had answered you at length, giving citations, but have not the room for it this week. We may have room next week.

J. F. B., Glen House.—1. Ed Hanlan has never been beaten in a match single-scull race. 2. It is customary to term all races open to different oarsmen, whether scullers or crews, regattas; but a match-race between two scullers or crews cannot be so termed.

UMPIRE, Ottawa.—1. It is a foul, and the batsmen is not out. 2. The base-runner had a right to remain on first-base, not being forced off.

SCORER.—1. Caskins caught for the New York Club in that game. 2. We do not score it as an error. 3. It is not an assist for the pitcher. 4. The short-stop should be credited with an assist.

SULLIVAN AND THE MAORI.

The spectacle presented at the Madison-square Garden last Monday night was not a rare one for this city of late years. Vast crowds had previously assembled there to see something in human guise "knocked out in four rounds." It was the added numbers on Monday night that made the spectacle more impressive. Probably never before were quite so many people huddled together within the large area covered by the exterior walls of the old railroad depot. It was an edifying sight, and it points a moral. It is not a new one. It has been pointed many times before. Its meaning is that the world does not always choose its popular idols from among men of brain. Brawn is still a factor in the universe. The masses respect intellectuality, but they admire figure and worship physique. It has been claimed that the age is degenerating because Sullivan and his associates can earn more money in one night by "putting up their hands" than a college professor can acquire in a year by dint of his brains. Hyer and another Sullivan could have earned as much in their pugilistic way thirty years ago, had there been in this city and vicinity as large a population to draw from, had there been as large a house as the Madison-square Garden to pile the people into, and had it been possible for Hyer and Yankee Sullivan to have given such an entertainment anywhere but in some out-of-the-way nook, inaccessible to any large body of the people in being prudently inaccessible to the police. It was the misfortune of Hyer and Yankee Sullivan that the "knocking-out system" had not been invented in their time. When Hyer was the same lion that John L. Sullivan is to-day, nothing would have pleased "Yankee" better than to have taken thirty-five per cent. of the net receipts along with a "knocking-out," guaranteed by the presence of police-officers not to be too severe. He would have laughed at the punishment he might have got as he had not laughed since he had the smallpox; and Tom Hyer, keeping himself in reasonably fair physical condition in order not to miss collecting his sixty-five per cent. of the net receipts whenever the opportunity to open the box-office presented itself, would be alive to-day, a hale and hearty man, not run to Cognac and seed by inaction. But the best picnic that ever Hyer and the other professors of agonistics in his time could get was to spar with gloves at the Bowery Theatre or at the Bowery Circus, on either a small guaranty or a percentage of the receipts shared with the manager of the dramatic theatre when not shared with the trick-mules and the other attractions of the circus. Had they sighed for big money, they would have had to put it up in the form of stakes, and, going far away from any human habitation, tried to half kill each other for it in a battle likely to be so long and exhausting that months of preparation were necessary to fit the contestants to stand the strain. The substitution of the knocking-out system shows that brains are really making headway in this world, although the college-professor is not coming in for any percentage of the receipts. The "knock-out" is an absolute triumph of brains, for it calls for but little preparatory training, and can be carried on in the midst of a community and at judicious intervals, the chief care being to allow the public a chance to get the second wind necessary to carry it solidly and unfalteringly up to the box-office. There is more brain displayed in connection with these affairs than they dream of who affect to believe that the salaries of statesmen, lawyers and others who exist altogether by their mental gifts are made to appear insignificant when contrasted with the sums realized by Sullivan as victor and by Slade even though slayed.

LAYCOCK AND HANLAN.

The aquatic world last week experienced the shock of a light thunderbolt hurled from the Antipodes. It came in the form of a challenge from Laycock of Australia to Hanlan. So far as its contents have been cabled, it proposes a race of no distance and at no particular time. It is to be for a specific sum of money, however. The sum is a large one, being no less than five thousand dollars a side. The Australian must have acquired new prowess since 1881. Then Hanlan beat him easily on the English Thames by four lengths. Furthermore, the Australian was in public opinion beaten before the race began, for the betting was as long as four to one against him. There should have been great improvement on Laycock's part in two years and a half, the more especially as in that time Hanlan himself has not been either idle or laggard, to warrant anybody's making a match in his behalf with the Canadian for anything like so much money as five thousand dollars a side. The likeliest person to back Laycock for so much wealth would be Laycock himself. Probably he has privately heard that Hanlan can be induced to visit Australia at some unknown time, if the financial guaranty is made large enough. With regard to there being no time named in the challenge, it is probable that Laycock has no idea of just when Hanlan would prefer to survey and lay out a course on the Parramatta River. As regards the important omission of distance, there may be doubt in Laycock's mind as to how far Hanlan would like to row after he shall have become cognizant of the peculiarities of an Australasian climate; but there can be no doubt that Laycock knows how far he himself would like to row in any climate for so much money as five thousand dollars deposited without any "drawback" to it. Distance is the first consideration with an oarsman when speed and bottom are to be tested; and as challengers who contemplate a match in good faith never fail to specify the distance, it may later on transpire that the Australian has not forgotten to name the length of the course, but that the cable has negligently failed to mention it.

THE RING.

SULLIVAN vs. SLADE.

The Maori Gets More Punishment Than He Wants.

A crowd greater in point of numbers, and of the same heterogeneous character as that which assembled at the same place to witness the memorable four-round glove-contests between John L. Sullivan and Tug Wilson, and Sullivan and Charles Mitchell, England's champion boxer, congregated within the four walls of Madison-square Garden, this city, on the evening of Monday, Aug. 6, when an event the sporting public had long wished to see—a combat in the latter-day pugilistic fashion between Champion Sullivan and the importation from far distant New Zealand, Herbert A. Slade, a Maori half-breed—took place. The latter, it will be remembered, was brought to the States by ex-Champion Jim Mace, at the instance of an individual in this city who has scoured a great part of both hemispheres in search of a pugilist who possessed the qualifications necessary to compel Sullivan to step down and out from the premier position to which his unquestioned fighting qualities, and more particularly his phenomenal striking powers, have elevated him. He arrived at San Francisco late in December last, and for some time afterwards the papers throughout the country were burdened with flattering descriptions of his physique and with glowing accounts of his deeds of prowess in the land of his birth—accounts which, by the way, subsequent advices from the Antipodes failed to corroborate. There was no denying that he was a strapping young fellow, and, as he possessed a fair reputation as a wrestler who was quick, skillful and strong, it was reasonable to suppose that if he had any ambition to attain celebrity as a fistic artist, and evinced ordinary intelligence and aptitude, he must, under the competent mentorship of that experienced master of the science Jim Mace develop into a clever boxer. It was blazoned forth by his importer that he had come here expressly to fight Sullivan for the championship and a large sum of money, and a challenge was issued to the latter, but the conditions embodied therein were of a nature that, as was well known to the Slade party, would not meet with Sullivan's approval, and, as they would not consent to treat on a fair basis, no match resulted. On the strength of the challenge, however, the Mace-Slade Combination managed to make money (for all save the party who started the troupe on the road) during their not very lengthy traveling tour. The public were anxious to see the newcomer's abilities tested in a glove encounter with the champion, as a match to fight in the old style did not seem to be among the possibilities, but, after the Maori's unfortunate experience with Robinson of the San Francisco Athletic Club, Mace was too knowing to permit anyone other than himself to put on the mittens with his protege, out of whom he fondly hoped to make considerable money. Consequently, as nothing worth knowing could be learned from witnessing a set-to between master and pupil, in which the former desired that the latter should make a favorable impression, nothing was actually known of the real qualifications as a pugilist of Slade up to the time of the departure of him and Mace for England, April 23 last. It was apparent, however, that the New Zealander was active on his feet, and that Jim had succeeded in imparting to him considerable knowledge of the art of sparring.

The exhibition tour made by them in England proved far from so successful as had been anticipated, and accordingly they shortened the period of their intended sojourn there, and once more turned their faces towards the Western World, where tickets of admission to sporting entertainments readily brought dollars where shillings could not be obtained in the land where Mace was once champion of all the boxers. Aware of the fact that in no other way could he hope to satisfactorily replenish his depleted exchequer, Mace, immediately after his arrival here on July 15, opened negotiations for a glove-encounter between Slade and Sullivan. His proposal that each party should have one-half of the net gate-receipts accruing from such a meeting was laughed at by Sullivan's representative, Al. Smith, who informed him that the best terms he could make were those accorded by his principal to Mitchell—thirty-five per cent. net, each side to pay one-half the necessary expenses. After some parleying Mace decided to accept these terms, and a written agreement was drawn up by his secretary, Harry Montague, and signed by James Wakely for Sullivan and Henry Rice for Slade. It was expressly stated therein that the contest should be governed by the Marquis of Queensberry rules as relating to such meetings, which stipulate that the rounds (which were fixed at four) shall be each of three minutes' duration, with one minute interval, a contestant who is knocked down or otherwise goes down to rise again, unassisted, in ten seconds, on penalty of losing. As the time intervening between signing and fighting was brief, and the issue of the impending conflict of moment to both principals, no time was lost by either in betaking himself to a locality where he could devote himself to such training as was deemed necessary to engage in a glove-contest of at most fifteen minutes' duration, for which the chief essentials are sound wind and strength. Sullivan domiciled himself July 23 at Scituate, Mass., where he partook of wholesome, nourishing food and eschewed injurious liquids, and under the care of Joe Goss and Pete McCoy got rid of much superfluous flesh, improved his wind, and hardened up considerably during the fortnight of his stay in that healthy spot. About the same time Slade sought a snug place on Long Island, a few miles from Brooklyn, where he was looked after constantly by Jack Brighton, the veteran pedestrian, while Mace did not neglect him. Had the Maori proved himself a more willing worker, perhaps he might have reduced his adipose matter considerably more than he did in the time allowed.

As was the case on previous similar occasions, the price of admission were fixed at one dollar to the Twenty-sixth street side of the house, and two dollars to the opposite side, the Madison avenue gallery and the main floor, with twenty-five dollars each for boxes, all of which were quickly sold. As usual, also, there was the same urgent demand for tickets, for which the premium asked by speculators was in many cases paid, the people coming in droves at an early hour, and there seeming to be scarcely a foot of spare room anywhere in the building long before the stars of the evening made their appearance. Very many persons more or less distinguished and widely known were in the vast throng, and residents of other cities, especially Boston and Philadelphia, were numerous. The atmosphere was dense with smoke, and the heat oppressive, but all bore the resultant discomfort, as they did the loathing, jamming and constant elbowing, with a cheerfulness which attested how much that was unpleasant they were willing to endure for the sake of seeing something they had waited for so long. In the centre of an inclosed space in the middle of the room was erected a stage, on which was a ring of the orthodox dimensions, twenty-four feet square, formed with two stout ropes wound around and securely fastened to eight strong stakes. The upper rope was placed higher than customary, at Mace's request, as an additional safeguard for his man, while the staging extended eighteen inches outside of the stakes. It was the strongest, most substantial boxing ring ever erected in the Garden. After the usual delay in commencing proceedings "Pop" Whittaker, who had been constituted director of sports, introduced Jack Davis and "Nixey," a couple of smart boxers who accompanied Mace and Slade from England, who opened the ball in merry fashion, although a man did not need spectacles to see that the former (who is a clever boxer and evidently a good 'un) was not "trying." After them came a brace of the home-bred division, Bob Farrell and Fiddler Neary, the bout serving to demonstrate the extra agility and cleverness of the former, although Fiddler did well, while his antics created much amusement. They were succeeded by that well-drilled pair of lightweights Jerry Murphy and Jimmy Kelly, who from long practice know how to make the most taking set-to of any lads in the land, and whose apparent earnest efforts to pulverize each other, without any real intention to harm, evoked the customary roars of applause. Murphy was in better form even than usual, or else Jimmy was hardly up to the mark for Jerry got in more facers than he generally does, and twice Kelly went down on his seat without wanting to. They were followed by Jimmy Murray (who recently made such short work of Bob Turnbull) and his frequent boxing mate Young Tom Allen. The former had the advantage in height and weight, and landed a little oftener than his opponent, but the latter was in better trim and felt more like punching this time. To those who like boxing of the slam-bang, no guard order, for which the three-minute rule is largely responsible, this meet must have afforded pleasure, for it was hit, smack, all the time they were in front of each other. The only other couple who participated in the preliminary sparring were Pete McCoy and Mike Muilery, clever boxers and willing fighters both, who made a very entertaining display, although the palm was carried away by the former, whose greater quickness enabled him to plant oftener than his opponent. A lengthy wait ensued, and proved very trying to the patience of the spectators, who, however, had not long given outward manifestation of their feelings when a shout from those nearest the dressing-rooms proclaimed the coming of the gladiators whom all yearned to see. The shout of welcome was taken up, increasing in volume until it culminated in a final roar as Sullivan, after much difficulty in forcing a passage through the densely packed mass of friendly humanity, mounted the stage and with a light step strode over to the northeast corner of the ring, stopping only long enough to bow his acknowledgments to the thousands who delighted to do him honor. He was accompanied by Joe Goss and Pete McCoy, carrying articles for use in such encounters. Immediately afterwards the man who had come so many thousands of miles to deprive the champion of his laurels appeared on the stage, and he, too, received a rousing welcome that indicated the presence of many who thought well of him, and wished him whatever of success he was capable of winning. No time was wasted, the men having made their toilets before coming out, and after doffing the knit undershirts worn by them they appeared in knee-breeches, stockings and shoes, being bare from the waist up. The proportions of the champion were seen to be better than those of his taller and heavier adversary, and there was a marked difference in his appearance now and the night he sparred Mitchell. He had trained down, we were informed, to a shade below 200 pounds, and, although still carrying too much beef, he was in far better condition than at that time, while his eye was bright and sparkling, and his countenance was the picture of confidence. He was as cool as usual, and he gazed unconcernedly, though most intently, at his opponent. Slade was plainly some pounds heavier than he ought to have been (his weight was said to be about 220lb. and he didn't look much lighter than that), and his underpinning seemed rather too light to properly support his large body in a physical struggle. He was nervous, too, and scarcely allowed himself to look across the stage at his formidable antagonist while Harry Montague was getting him ready for the fray. The expression on his countenance was certainly not calculated to inspire his friends with confidence. Mr. Whittaker now introduced to the audience Barney Aaron, who had been chosen referee, and Charley Davies, the timekeeper, and, after the gladiators had been formally presented and admonished that there was to be no wrestling, the stage was cleared, and the word given for the men to stand up for

THE FIGHT.

Round 1.—Each assumed an artistic position as they faced, and those who expected to see the champion make one of his hurricane rushes at once were disappointed. They sparred for a few moments, feeling each other, and then Sullivan assumed the offensive with an easy left-hander which failed to reach home, although he laid the right glove somewhat gently on the left ear, Slade countering on the jaw. A little more sparring, and then Sullivan commenced real business, and, using both hands rapidly at the head, drove Slade to his corner. The Maori extricated himself from danger and took the middle, where Sully set about him, dashing the left on the body and the right on the nose, while he received a left-hander on the mouth and a little one on the body. They exchanged several blows at quarters too close to inflict damage, and then, separating, the champion landed his left fairly on the nasal organ hard enough to distill the ruby and slightly confuse the recipient. He followed this up with a punch on the jaw with the right, the Maori retaliating on the body. This brought on a rally, in which the Bostonian's blows were the more numerous and effective. Sparring for breath was then in order. Sullivan attempted to resume with the left, but Slade jumped back out of harm's way. The champion followed, however, sending the left at the body and the right in the face, and napping one on the nose, for which he delivered one, two on each side of the head twice without return, and then a smash with the right on the left-eye dropped Slade. No sooner had the latter got upon his feet than the champion began a furious cannonade, knocking him up against the ropes. The pepper was so hot that the Australian, to escape, turned his back and fled across the stage, pursued by Sullivan, delivering blows as he ran. Reaching the ropes on the other side, Slade half turned to face Sullivan, who on the instant delivered a hard right-hander on the body, which knocked the half-breed through the ropes and clean off the stage backwards. A yell arose at this, mingled with cries of "He's a dunghill," "He's a cur," and similar uncomplimentary allusions to the man who had run away from punishment. Few expected that Slade would again appear on the stage, but he did as soon as he could rise, badly shaken by his fall, and make his way around to the steps, which was long after the ten-seconds limit had expired; but allowance had to be made on account of the nature of the tumble. Upon facing, Sullivan again attacked him, was lightly countered, the Maori then seizing him about the neck, half-arm exchanges taking place at the head, and then, as they separated and the champion was about to strike, "Time" was called, and they walked to their corners. There was great cheering for Sullivan at the termination of this round, which virtually decided the contest in his favor.

2. Both responded with alacrity to the call. Sullivan, although having obtained a good lead, contrary to his custom did not attack his man with impetuosity the moment they got within range, seemingly desirous of giving Slade a chance to show his skill in sparring, confident that he could beat him at that game as well. He tapped the Maori gently on the facial promontory with the left, napping a return on the chin, and then mutual exchanges of no account followed, until Sully, tiring of such mild play, rushed at Slade, driving him before him with a succession of right and left blows, the Maori fighting cleverly on the retreat, but his blows lacking steam and leaving no sign. A half-clinch and infighting was ended by Sullivan pushing Slade away and then delivering the right heavily on the left ear, napping a return from the same hand. Sparring was indulged in for a few moments, and then Sullivan made one of his favorite rushes, bombarding the Australian furiously with both mawleys and fighting him down near one of the middle stakes, Slade got up quickly and was first to resume, lodging a left-hander on the face, for which he received full change in the form of a shot from the champion's auctioneer in the middle of the head. Mutual exchanges with both hands, mostly at head, followed, the Australian partially redeeming himself by the stand he was making at this stage of the game. Another rush by the champion caused the Antipodean to "get back" in anything but good order, and he utterly failed to ward off the fusillade kept up by Sullivan, who finally knocked him down close to his own corner. Rising, Slade again first offered, getting lightly on the body, the effect of the fall in the first round and the heavy blows he had received partly dazing him and taking away what power his blows at first possessed. The rapid fighting and his exertions also told on the champion, who now showed signs of weakness scarcely less marked than those shown by the New-Zealander. A few exchanges, perfectly harmless, led to a clinch and half-arm work, in the midst of which they were sent to corners by a call of "Time." As some person other than the proper official had called it, however, the referee ordered them to fight on. As they came together again Joe Goss, carried away with excitement and somewhat anxious, repeatedly shouted to Sullivan: "Hit him in the belly," and upon an ex-amateur heavyweight champion suggesting that Sully had his man safe he replied: "Aye, but I want him a bit safer." Sullivan did not follow his second's advice then, neither doing the other harm during the brief time which elapsed ere the round ended.

3. While seated in their respective corners the gladiators were closely scrutinized. Of the two Sullivan's bellows seemed most out of order, he breathing very hard, but otherwise he appeared none the worse for the scrimmage. Slade's wind seemed but little affected, a fact easily accounted for, as he had exerted himself far less than his adversary; but his face and body were very much flushed, nose enlarged and his left eye damaged. He was plainly very tired, and his looks showed him to be thoroughly disgusted with his job. The encouraging words of Jim Mace and Bob Smith cheered him but little. Having made up his mind to put an end to it as soon as possible, Sullivan the moment they came within range sent the left at the body, and as the Maori's head came forward he followed with the right on the ear, shaking Slade, who, however, got in his right on the dial. They closed, but immediately separated again, Sully delivering a parting shot on the stomach. The Maori steadied himself and got his left neatly home full in the face. This woke up the tiger in the champion, who dashed in, hitting Slade with the right a smash on the cheek, and then forcing him to the ropes on the west-side. The Maori made no attempt to deliver, seeking but to escape the succession of blows showered on him. Stooping, he dodged to the right, and started on a dead run across the stage. Sullivan, a look of contempt on his face, pursued him, sending in his right repeatedly, the last blow catching the frightened New-Zealander on the back of the head and neck and sending him sprawling upon the floor, face downwards, under the ropes at the southeast corner, where he went over before. He with some difficulty rose to a sitting posture, where he remained, the picture of bewilderment, until one of his party assisted him to his feet, and led him in a dazed condition to his corner. He was limp and all the fight was knocked out of him, and, although Sullivan, who had really won by Slade's failure to rise in the ten seconds allowed, besides being assisted to his feet, was willing to give the Maori a chance of another round, neither Slade nor his backers wished to continue. Sullivan thereupon shook his late opponent's ungloved hand, and left the stage quite strong and fresh, while the beaten Australasian had to be assisted to his quarters.

A FIGHT AND A FOOT-RACE.

A couple of hundred Chicago sports drove in carriages to a small grove outside the city limits Aug. 1, to witness the settlement by pugilistic means of a difficulty between Ned Connors and Reddy McCue, a brace of rough-alleys, each of whom thought he could everlastingly warm the other. A local paper thus describes the meeting and what came of it: 'The men came to the scratch in good order, and were apparently pretty evenly matched. After some light sparring on both sides Connors landed a blow under Reddy's left eye, which drew blood and caused him to weaken completely. Clutching his left shoulder with his right hand, the tramp-pugilist ran out of the ring, giving utterance to exclamations of pain, and declaring that his shoulder was broken. Connors pursued him through the woods, and a weasel chase was kept up around a carriage until Connors was declared the victor. This ended the fight. The stakes, $77, were awarded to Connors. The men climbed into their carriages, and, voicing their disgust in language more forcible than elegant, drove away."

SLADE AND MITCHELL.—On Tuesday, July 31, the final deposit of fifteen hundred dollars was posted for Herbert A. Slade in his match with Charles Mitchell, which is to be decided Sept. 11, within two hundred miles of Kansas City, Mo. The final stakeholder, Harry Hill, had received the full amount of the stakes on Mitchell's part before the latter and Madden went West. Choice of ground was tossed for by Mitchell's representative and Mace (on behalf of Slade), the former winning. The losing party is to receive ten days' notice of the exact location of the battleground. Mitchell and Madden have been stopping during the past three weeks at Manitou Springs, Colorado, a cool spot, 6,?97 feet above the level of the sea, and which is called the Saratoga of the West, because of its health-giving mineral springs. They were to remain there a week or so longer, calculating to return to Kansas City and commence close training about Aug. 13.

DEATH OF A PROMINENT TURFMAN.

Milton H. Sanford, the well-known turfman, died on the afternoon of Aug 3 at his residence in Newport, R. I. He was born at Medway, Mass., in 1812, and for many years was engaged in commercial and manufacturing pursuits, accumulating a fortune which enabled him to gratify his love of the turf. He was one of the original member of the American Jockey Club and the owner of some of the best thoroughbreds ever seen on the American turf, including Earring, La Polka, Niagara, Monarchist, Preakness and Salina, with each of which he won important races. A number of years ago he also figured on the English turf, but with indifferent success, Brown Prince running second to Chesmant for the Two Thousand Guineas in 1877, and Start securing a like position in the race for the Cesarewitch the following year. He had a large breeding establishment, known as the Preakness Farm, near Paterson, N. J., at the commencement of his career on the turf, which he subsequently sold and removed his stock to Kentucky, where he purchased land at North Elkhorn, near Lexington, and there continued the breeding of thoroughbreds until the infirmities of advanced age obliged him to retire, when he disposed of it to Daniel Swigert. Mr. Sanford was a very popular man, highly respected and esteemed.

SPORTING NOTES.

.... The Bolivian Minister at La Paz, Bolivia, has remitted to the Minister of Foreign Affairs in Rio Janeiro photographs of drawings of an extraordinary saurian killed on the Beni after receiving thirty-six balls. By order of the President of Bolivia, the dried body, which had been preserved at Asuncion, was sent to La Paz. It is twelve meters long from snout to point of the tail, which latter is flattened. Besides the anterior head it has four meters behind, two small but completely formed heads rising from the back. All three have much resemblance to the head of a dog. The legs are short and end in formidable claws.

.... While lawn tennis is thriving at Newport, R. I., croquet is rarely seen there, and baseball is sadly out of joint.

.... Horicon Marsh, Wis., for many years noted for its excellence as a duck-shooting ground, has been leased for a term of twenty-five years by Messrs. Van Brunt, Davis, Hart and Hays, who, while proposing to strictly enforce the game-laws, will accord to visiting sportsmen the privilege of shooting over the grounds in proper season.

.... It is proposed to disestablish the Prince of Monaco by his own voluntary act. All he desires from the French Government for the little that is left of his principality—scant in area, but vast in "chances"—is two millions of dollars. They will have to give it to him soon, if he is ever to get it. He has long been blind, and now a cerebral disease forecasts insanity.

.... According to the theory of Prof. Huxley, it is not in the power of man either to diminish or to increase the number of cod, herring, mackerel or other deep sea fishes; and that, while salmon-rivers require protection, the sea-fisheries are inexhaustible.

I will give the world a year to get a competitor, either by cash, muscle or mind."

.... A hermaphrodite deer, having a complete set of horns, looking like a genuine buck and weighing 150lb gross, was recently killed by S. A. Randall on St. Helena Mountain, near Santa Rosa, Cal. As the law prohibits the killing of does, here is a nice question for the lawyers.

Anderson finished opening when Murphy had yet three to go, but upon counting from the buckets in which the clams were deposited it was found that Murphy's receptacle contained more than that of his opponent, who had lost by spilling. The award was therefore in favor of Murphy. Michael McManus was referee.

As with the pencil artists trace
Each salient feature of the face,
Or sketch with wondrous taste or skill
The glowing sunset, lake or hill,
Or landscapes fair, from models real,
Or scenes and faces but ideal,
So authors with the potent pen,
Recording words and deeds of men
In pleasing verse or sombre prose,
From life's beginning to its close,
Pen-pictures draw, with equal power,
Of human life from earliest hour—
Through childhood's joy and manhood's grief,
Through sunshine, cloud and pleasures brief;
Through farce and tragedy—through all
The scenes, until the curtain falls
And life is done—the play is o'er—
The actor treads the boards no more.

But see! The artist with his brush
Each color blends with skillful touch!
See yon rude sketch on canvas white
Spring into life 'mid colors bright!
Once cold and dead, yon portrait, fair,
Now beams with life, and beauty rare!

'Tis thus the voice, with action's aid,
Gives color, beauty, light and shade
To pictures from the poet's pen;
And from detail of deeds of men
Recorded on the silent page
(Though oft forgot and sere with age)
Fresh youth and beauty long concealed
Are by the actor's art revealed.

But yet no painter with light and shade
The inmost dream of his soul portrayed,
No portrait from the artist's hand
E'er yet has filled his heart's desire;
No poem from the poet's pen
E'er yet has chained the thought entire.
To nature true, whate'er the tool,
Pen, brush or voice, observe this rule:
The Artist plays right well his part
Who by his art disguises Art.

A PARISIAN ROMANCE.

CHAPTER I.—THE BED OF DEATH.

It was a Saturday in the month of May—a month dedicated to the roses and to the visitation of strangers. Saturday is the fashionable day at the Circus of the Champs Elysees, Paris, as Tuesday is the fashionable day at the Theatre Francais. Only at the Francais the demi-monde rarely show themselves, while at the Circus they are in the majority, which, however, does not prevent ladies of respectability from patronizing the house. On the contrary, ladies of fashion seize upon it as an opportunity for reviewing the army of irregulars, for inquiring the damsels' names and for studying their toilets.

The auditorium was crowded to repletion. The camp of the society-ladies is at the right, and that of the demi-monde at the left. Why, it is difficult to say; still, such is the distinction. The passage-way through which enter the horses was filled with exquisites of the higher and lower social degrees, serving as connecting links between the two clans watching their movements; and during the intermissions these gentry hurry to their patronesses to repeat current gossip or to comment upon recent scandals.

The first part of the programme was being terminated. Upon one of the most elevated seats of the amphitheatre, close to the staircase, two females were seated in conversation. They were evidently habitual visitors, inasmuch as they interchanged nods with the gentlemen below, near the ring. One is light and roseate, with puffed blonde hair, blue eyes, a charming little nose, and a head like Du Barry's. She is scarcely twenty, and it is apparent that she is in her initial season, for she is radiant in smiles as she incessantly inquires of her companion information respecting the gentlemen saluting her friend. She is little Martine Ferrette.

The other is a marvelous creature—a pale brunette, with large black eyes and arched eyebrows, like unto a Circassian, whose Oriental features are relieved by an expression of keen intelligence. She has, moreover, a very distinguished air, with the manners of refined society. Notwithstanding the course of life she has been leading until quite recently, she assumes a seat, as of right, among the ladies of society, for she is well born and was educated at St. Denis. Jeanne De Lorris has held and still holds a brilliant position among the stars of the gay world. She remains handsome, and is perpetually sought after. She is, actually, some thirty-seven years of age—a fact she does not conceal from her intimate friends, as she is no longer in quest of conquests. She has visited the circus as an exception.

An elegant, well-formed gentleman, having observed these females from below, manœuvres to join them.

"Robert Desternay, is it not?" remarked Martine in a low tone, "who manages a horse so splendidly?"

"The very same, my dear."

"This is an incident!" exclaimed the young man after pressing Jeanne's hand. "Had I known that you would be here I would have secured the stall beside you."

"You would have erred, dear sir, for I would have bored you amazingly. I have the blues, and will not remain to the close."

"That suits me. We will go to the Cascade in the Bois de Boulogne."

"Not for my life! I have renounced such diversions."

"Then rumor speaks truth. Do you seriously meditate upon retirement in the country?"

"I do; and, in proof, I sent my carriages and horses to Tattersall's this morning, reserving my bay mare and coupe until my mansion can be sold."

"How! your mansion, too? You have gone mad! There is some lover at the bottom of this business."

"At my age! You are an idiot, my friend."

"Then you leave Paris for the sake of becoming a Sister of Charity in the provinces! You would not play that character over-well."

"Tell me, Robert," interrupted Madame De Lorris, "who is that lady below in front of us, near the Countess de Ganges?"

"The one in black silk, with a Tallien hat of black straw? Oh! she has a history."

"A history! Tell it me."

"I scarcely know it. At least, I know it but partially. She comes here almost every evening, quite alone, and appears to be a noble stranger recently arrived in Paris in quest of somebody."

"A lover?"

"I think not. Fat Sartilly tried once to speak to her, but she set him in his place with a high-toned repulse. Still, we must remark the persistence with which she scrutinizes all society men. The other night she left abruptly in the middle of the performance. We presumed she had discovered the object of her search; but it seems that she did not overtake him, for she returned upon the next night, and watches with more anxiety than ever. May I ask why she interests you?"

"She resembles an English lady of my former acquaintance, and I would like to know whether it be the same."

"You can find out. Sartilly amused himself by following her after leaving the circus, and affirms that he saw her enter the house in the Rue de Pouthien, where the worthy Madame Rodin carries on her various trades."

"What! at Valentine's? Then your noble stranger is only an adventuress."

The conversation dropped; but the singular information supplied by a man ever well posted haunted Jeanne's brain, and she asked herself whether she should seek additional intelligence from Valentine, who kept an establishment in the Rue de Pouthien she had long avoided.

Despite serious temptations, she hesitated, because she was aware from experience of the public reputation of the woman Rodin's veritable profession. Madame De Lorris had not always been so reserved, for during her relinquished career she had been a frequenter of Valentine's saloons, where they gambled heavily in the society of the cream of the demi-monde attendants at the exquisite entertainments given to attract rich noblemen to this equivocal mansion.

But the days of youth were passed, and Jeanne had many reasons for keeping aloof from these compromising festivities. One was paramount, and that particular one impelled search of information touching the stranger she imagined to have recognized at the circus.

By dint of reflection Jeanne concluded that it would do no harm to have a quarter of an hour's conversation with a person distasteful to her.

"Take the Boulevard Haussmann returning to the house," she said to her coachman after parting with her friends, "and stop at the corner of the Rue de Berry, where you will wait for me."

She had no desire that the man versed in the details of Parisian life should see the place whither she was going. Consequently she got out at the point indicated, and walked to her destination. Valentine occupied a habitation peculiarly adapted for the purposes to which she had devoted it—a building between a courtyard and a garden flanked by two wings running to the street, and equidistant from a majestic carriage entrance.

Each of these wings, three stories high, possessed separate entrances and contained apartments the worthy proprietor pretended to let to respectable strangers passing through Paris, the dancing and gaming-rooms being located in the main building, fronting upon the courtyard.

Jeanne De Lorris had not forgotten that to reach Valentine in person it was necessary to ring at the small door of the left wing. She, moreover, remembered that habitual patrons rang three times at slight intervals; hence she failed not to have recourse to this method of introduction, whereby visitors of both sexes avoided passing under observation of a hall-porter.

The door opened without noise or delay, and Madame De Lorris, upon closing it, recognized the narrow vestibule and heavily-carpeted staircase. She was in nowise astonished at finding no one to receive her; hence she ascended to a second story, where a chambermaid was in waiting to conduct her to an exquisite boudoir in the other wing.

At the termination of some minutes Valentine made her appearance. She had neither the style nor the manners of her class. She was tall, still young, a little faded in complexion, and not in the least inclined to embonpoint.

"How! you!" she exclaimed on entering. "Welcome to you. Your old club friends pretend that you are going to be a nun."

At this familiarity Jeanne knit her brow, as it was a taste of a would-be buried past.

"It is an exaggeration," she said with a constrained smile; "still it is true that I am selling off to retire to the country."

"With an income of sixty thousand good livres, eh?"

"No, from forty to fifty."

"Then you don't come upon business?"

"I simply came to ask whether it be true that you shelter in this wing——"

"The palace of good intentions," interrupted Valentine, with a laugh.

"Yes. Well, I am told that you have at present among your lodgers a strange lady to be seen at every circus-performance."

"Good!—the mysterious woman. It is a mistake. She does not lodge here, but comes at ten o'clock each night."

"A daily appointment, then?"

"One which has amounted to nothing. My dear, there is nothing funnier. I received about a month since a visit from a gentleman I took to be the intendent of some rich lord. He proposed to hire the apartments on the second floor—adjoining the little parlor where we are—at a rent of a thousand francs a month, and to pay three months in advance, upon one condition—you'll never guess what it was—that of being allowed to furnish them after his own fancy and at his own cost. Naturally, I accepted. You might think he was to occupy them? Not at all. They were for a female who was to present herself to me, and did in fact present herself fifteen days afterwards, when the new furniture was ready."

"The lady of the Circus?"

"Precisely. She came veiled to the teeth; but I saw her afterwards with her face uncovered, when she did not suspect it; and, as I sometimes go to the Circus, I recognized her in her stall, always in the same place, amid respectable ladies."

"Good! And what did she want of you when you received her?"

"She told me point-blank that an apartment should have been prepared for her, and asked for the keys, which I immediately gave her. The gentleman had his already, and I supposed that they had arranged their meetings. But here the story gets muddled. She came every night, and he never came at all."

"How do you know?"

"I have, my dear, my little means for spying. The room intervening between this parlor and the apartment has a special distinction. There are holes piercing the partition-wall, through which you can see like a cosmorama. You understand? Well, I have made use of them to watch the lady, and always found her alone. She comes in, lights two candles, takes off her hat and gloves, and seats herself upon the lounge in a melancholic position. Oftentimes she cries. She should be very handsome, and I judge her to be forty-five at the utmost. She is a reputable woman—that I know."

"Very well. Still, how explain the perpetual absence of the man she is expecting?"

"I cannot. Could he conceal himself in the room with the holes, I should take him for a lunatic gloating over the woman's tears. But the observatory is closed on the outside. And more, I am certain that he has never set foot in the chamber he has so superbly furnished. He placed there, among other things, a splendid bed, which the woman has never used, even to rest herself. But, now I think of it, would you like to see her?"

"Is she there?"

"For some twenty minutes. If you have a mind, I will put you in the little room, and you can gaze upon the forlorn one as long as you like."

"It is necessery for me to see her to be certain as to her being the person for whom I am in search. Later I will explain."

"Oh! I ask nothing. You have a right to your secrets. And, to set you at your ease, I will leave you to watch alone. My roulette devotees are coming in, and I must attend them below. Upon contemplating our Ariadne in despair long enough, you can go out as you came in. You know the way, and how to get out into the street. You can pass out without anybody knowing that Madame De Lorris, bondholder, landed proprietor and convert to virtue, has entered Valentine's doors. I hope you will be a good girl."

"I am obliged, and will remunerate you at some future time."

"Not a word upon that. By the way, I warn you that you will during observation be plunged in profound darkness, for the least light would betray your presence by gleaming through the holes. Now, are you determined upon becoming a seeress?"

"Yes; and if you only knew why?"

"I have no need of knowing it. Come!" said Valentine, raising the tapestry concealing the door of communication.

Then she politely turned the polished copper knob, and as the door opened Jeanne glided through the narrow entrance. Valentine had previously shown her this unusual chamber as one of the peculiarities of her mansion devoted to singular uses. She knew it to have neither windows nor furniture, while it was heavily carpeted to deaden sound of a tread. In front of her two luminous points, close to each other, shone through the darkness, marking the location of the treacherous openings.

Resolved upon prosecuting her enterprise to the end, Madame De Lorris, guided by the lights, groped her way to the partition-wall, and there found a cushioned divan. Upon this she knelt, and the two holes came directly at the height of her eyes. Her head bent as she looked through them.

The first object striking her view was a curtainless bedstead, with four carved columns sustaining a massive canopy heavily upholstered in the pure Louis XIII style. The other furniture was of corresponding luxury, showing that a rich man of taste and intelligence had directed the fitting-up of the hired apartment. Two candles burned upon a lacquered stand; still, Madame De Lorris could not perceive the person who should have lighted them. But shortly afterwards she noticed the Tallien hat upon a table and a pair of black gloves lying upon the chimney-piece. Valentine's indications were correct; still, where was the woman?

At first Jeanne discovered her to be seated upon a low chair, with her back directly against the partition-wall, her hair scarcely reaching to a level with the holes—blonde hair sown with silver threads. Jeanne imagined her to be reading or gazing upon some object placed upon her knees, for her head was bent forward. Suddenly she arose, and Jeanne could perceive, not her face, as she turned her back, but her figure, which was elegant, and the object which she held at arm's length at a distance from her side, as if to judge of an effect produced by holding in the light. This object was a medallion encircled with diamonds, glistening brilliantly—a portrait probably, which the stranger kissed and placed within the bosom of her dress. Then she passed her hand over her eyes, perchance to wipe away tears, and slowly walked towards the bed.

"Is it she?" said Jeanne to herself with indescribable anxiety; "and that portrait may be ——"

The stranger ascended the two steps serving as a pedestal to the immense bedstead, and in so doing exposed her profile. She remained in this position but a second, and Madame De Lorris had scarcely time to scan her features before the lady extended herself upon the bed, her face turned towards the coverlet, in the attitude of a woman broken with sorrow and seeking slumber as a solace for her woes.

The stranger, after some half convulsive movements, fell into a positive lethargy. Gradually sleep overpowered her; her breathing, at first hard and irregular, became moderate and almost imperceptible, as one lying in a stupor.

Madame De Lorris became alarmed, as Rodin had affirmed that the lady had not even lain for rest upon this bed, and her eyes never quitted the slumberer; so that, by dint of gazing fixedly, her vision became disturbed.

It struck her that the canopy had decreased in height.

"'Tis strange," she murmured. "A while since it touched the ceiling, and now —— No, I am deceived. It is an illusion, or my sight is bad. This bedstead was never constructed for smothering sleepers."

To repress the emotion oppressing her head, she arose and moved away from the partition, so that her self-composure might be restored. Around her silence reigned profound amid the deepest darkness. The luminous points allured her. She resisted for a time, but anxiety overpowered her. She looked again, and the blood froze in her veins. She was not deceived. The canopy of the bedstead was descending. The distance separating it from the ceiling was increased by a foot. The mechanism operated noiselessly, and, before the lapse of minutes, the enormous mass must descend to crush animation out of the frail frame of the unsuspicious sleeper.

Terrified to the heart's core, Jeanne's first thought was to give an alarm arousing the house with the cry of assassination. But almost immediately the face of a chaste young girl, living aloof from this corrupt world, floated before her eyes—of a girl who should never know what had once been her mother.

"For me," she muttered, "it would never do to be again found in contact with these roues, who have almost forgotten me, but who on the morrow would proclaim my presence at Roden's to all Paris; and upon publication of this incident the police must intervene. Then will I be forced to testify at the very moment of shaking off that past which I have dragged after me like a cannon-ball. Never! I had better die!"

Jeanne looked again. The canopy was but two feet over the woman's head. Madame De Lorris remembered having heard that a whistle sufficed to awaken a sleeper. So she placed her lips to one of the holes, and whistled—or rather attempted to whistle, for to produce a shrill sound requires an apprenticeship she had never undergone. The weak whistle she succeeded in emitting did not awaken the slumberer, but produced a slight noise, something like the snapping of teeth seeming to come from the rear of the furnished apartments. As they were composed of several chambers, accessible by a separate staircase, it was possible that there was some person in the room immediately behind that containing the bedstead. As the wing had no porter, the lodgers could come and go without fear of being seen, particularly during the night. Assuredly, this stifling machine would not operate of its own accord. Certainly, there must have been someone to touch a spring a given moment to set it going. Jeanne arrived at a conclusion. Overwhelmed by fatigue and sorrow, the poor woman had lain down for the first time, and the assassin, watching in the shade, had profited by the opportunity.

"He is there," murmured Madame De Lorris. "He has heard me, and, should he catch me, would slay me. But he cannot reach me, for he knows not that there is a communicating door, which I alone can open, as Valentine told me the key is on this side. I have nothing to fear, do I but keep silent—nothing save my conscience reproaching me for cruel abandonment of a woman when it depended upon me to wrest her from death. No! I will not abandon her—I will not let this horrible work be accomplished—I will call out—I will call with all my strength—there is still time, I trust."

Madame De Lorris attempted to cry out, but her voice died in her throat, stifled by excitement.

Then she could restrain herself no longer. The danger she would brave, the daughter she adored, orphaned probably by her generous imprudence, all was forgotten to run to that door separating her from that victim she would protect against assassination.

She sought for it in the partition by feeling in the darkness, but she felt where it was not. She went first to the right and then to the left, and felt beneath her touch nothing save the silken surface of the hangings. Finally she touched a finely-chiseled lock and a diminutive key, which she hesitated not to turn. The door yielded slightly, being retained by a bolt which she could not lay hand upon. At last she discovered it, drew it briskly and opened the door. The abrupt passage from darkness to light confused her, and she momentarily stopped.

In front of her was shaking a tapestry doorway which she could not perceive when kneeling in her observatory. In the centre of the room arose the bedstead, which had been converted into a sepulchre, as the woman had disappeared beneath the dais. Madame De Lorris rushed forward, and in her precipitancy overturned the table and the lights. One of the candles extinguished in the fall, but the other continued to burn, its flickering flame scarcely illuminating surrounding objects.

Crowned by a dome of dark upholstery, the bedstead appeared a catafalque. She went to the bedstead and used her nails in an endeavor to upraise the fatal canopy, but found her efforts to be futile. The weight was too heavy, the adherence too perfect. The inventor of the destructive machine had made every calculation. The progressive tension had been so well regulated and so powerful that the stranger had been seized, enveloped, annihilated, without power of making a movement to extricate herself from its murderous embrace.

Before Jeanne could leave this scene a hand seized her by the neck and another was placed upon her eyes. She sought to disengage herself, but the hand upon her neck was one of iron, which turned her around.

"If you cry out, if you struggle, you are a dead woman," uttered a voice in a low tone.

And he pushed her before him. She had no strength for resistance, but yielded to the impulsion, and found herself, in the twinkling of an eye, beyond the tapestry doorway in a place of perfect darkness. There the man held her against the wall and resumed:

"Now, speak; how did you enter?"

"And as she remained mute, suffocated by excitement, he added:

"Speak, or I'll strangle you! Whence came you?"

"I was at Valentine's," stammered Jeanne.

"Valentine is the procuress keeping this house. Are you a girl of the town?"

Madame De Lorris had courage and presence of mind to answer affirmatively.

"And come to this house for your trade. That is likely. Still you had no business in the room whence you have come out. You were concealed there as a spy upon me."

"No, I swear to you!"

"You lie. Tell the truth. It is your only chance for escaping the chastisement you merit. Come! Confess! Should you persist in denial, I shall not spare you."

Madame De Lorris felt lost, whatever she did. The assassin had a great interest in suppressing the only witness of his crime, and she was at his mercy.

"I did not act as a spy upon you," she replied; "for I did not forsee my presence at a murder. I came to ask information from Valentine. She received me in a room where I had never been before, and left because called elsewhere, as they gamble to-night. I waited for her return, and, wearied of waiting, was about to go, when I noticed a light shining through the partition which is pierced with holes; then ——"

"Have a care! I will make sure that you do not deceive me," interrupted the man holding her.

"Do so!" she rejoined.

He released her with these words:

"Do not stir. Should I not find you in the position I left you, your examination will rest here, as I will twist your neck without form of law."

Madame De Lorris had no intention of disobeying him, but she listened earnestly. She soon heard a sharp noise, and divined its cause, as she had resumed composure. The man, after visiting the observatory, took precautions against being surprised, and had carried off the key of the communicating door; and as he did not return immediately, she presumed that he had stopped to pick up the light she had overturned, as a fire would have alarmed the people in the house.

After the lapse of some minutes, appearing to Jeanne overlong, she again submitted to contact of the hands previously seizing her; but this time they were placed upon her shoulders, and the voice, grave and sonorous, resumed:

"You have not lied. The holes are there, and used possibly for watching the tenants of this apartment. Confess that she showed them to you."

"I do."

"To play the spy?"

"She said that she happened to observe a woman who came every evening, and was astonished to find her always alone. Curiosity impelled me to do the same, Valentine having gone ——"

"And when you saw the canopy descend upon the sleeping woman you attempted to whistle to wake her up; then, not being successful, you entered to assist her."

"Why deny it? You seized me while leaning over the bed stifling her. Had I known you to have been there ——"

"What would you have done?"

"Run to tell Valentine what was going on," replied Madame De Lorris boldly.

Her frankness might sacrifice her, and still it might save her. Silence ensued, and Jeanne comprehended her destiny to be at stake.

"You are audacious in speaking to me thus," the man said after meditation.

"You would not believe me did I speak otherwise. I am an unfortunate, whom men despise, but I would despise myself had I not attempted to wrest a woman from a frightful death."

"Frightful? No. She did not suffer," chuckled the murderer. "And you were wrong in attempting her defense, for your generosity will cost you dear. Why meddle in the matter? Did you know her?"

"I had never seen her, but I have a heart."

"Oh! no effusions! Prepare to follow her into the world to which I have sent her. Should I permit you to live, you will denounce me."

Madame De Lorris was sagacious enough not to protest.

"Well, kill me, then," she said. "Madame Rodin's servants will find my corpse to-morrow, and Justice will discover the man having these apartments."

The hands leaning upon her shoulders trembled. She had struck home.

"It appears that Rodin has related to you the story of my tenantcy," resumed the voice, more vibrating than ever.

"Yes," replied Jeanne without hesitation; "and, had she foreseen the consequences, she would have refused your offers. The idea of preparing for a crime never struck her."

"She will never know that a crime has been committed."

Madame De Lorris was silent; but she asked herself how the assassin dare flatter himself that he would not be discovered.

"You doubt my statement?" he demanded, shaking her violently. "Well, well! march! and when you see what I shall show you all doubts will be at an end."

He seized the head of the unfortunate woman in such a manner as to cover her eyes with his fingers, and, turning her about, compelled her to walk before him. She could not see, but a moment afterwards the tapestry of the door rustled in her face. He was driving her into the death-chamber. With what aim? That she could not imagine; but when she became partially composed she noticed that the skin of the hands bandaging her eyes was fine and soft, unlike those of a workingman. Moreover, the man affected to speak in a coarse manner while he expressed himself in choice language.

He pushed her with his knee, but, after making a dozen steps in this fashion, he separated his fingers while continuing to hold her head in front of him. Madame De Lorris recoiled instinctively. The bedstead was there before her eyes, only it had resumed its original form, while upon the bed lay the body of the woman, scarcely cold, without change in attitude, and resembling one in slumber. Madame De Lorris comprehended what had occurred during the interval of her incarceration in the dark room. The murderer touched a spring, reversing the action of the machinery, and placed the lighted candle upon the table.

"You see she has not suffered," he said coolly. "She has not even moved, and her clothing is undisturbed. Rodin's servants will in the morning tell their mistress of the tenant's death. Any doctor will assign it to apoplexy, as there are no signs of violence on the body, and no human being will suppose that the top of a bedstead could descend expressly to stifle a sleeper, and then reascend to its place. You alone have seen it in operation, and, should you keep silent, the world will be ignorant of the truth. I can permit you to go forth hence alive were I certain of placing reliance upon the oath of a woman of your stamp. You must consequently die."

Madame De Lorris shuddered, but she uttered not a word in reply to this terrible conclusion. She still hoped, and was not in the wrong.

"Come, you are not afraid," resumed the man. "Will you swear silence upon this corpse?"

"What use in swearing when you suspect me?"

"I have pity for you, and consent to put your discretion to the test, should your answers allow me to believe in it. Come, plead your case."

"How can I denounce you," quoth Jeanne, "when I know not who you are? I have never seen your face, and, should I ever again meet you, I could not recognize you."

"You will never meet me, I assure you," respounded the man; "but this certainly does not suffice. I desire a belief in the natural death of an unknown person, and her burial as such. In a word, I desire that you will never let drop an allusion, direct or indirect, to this business to awaken the least suspicion."

"Believe you that I would boast of having been in this house?"

"No; but you will return and see Rodin?"

"Never. I have no need for her."

"Are you rich enough for that?"

"As a proof, I am about to leave Paris to live respectably in the country."

"I will ascertain whether you speak the truth, for you will be closely watched. Should I not inquire your name or address at present, it is because, from the morrow forth, I shall be completely informed as to you, your surroundings and the life you lead. And I warn you that an account will be rendered of your words and deeds, to instruct me as to how I shall proceed in the event of your treason."

"You will slay me, I know."

"Yes; but that is not enough. You are not alone in the world. If you have neither mother nor children, you have a lover. Well, upon the commission of the first imprudence, even without intention of annoying me, you will receive a warning, for some misfortune will occur to the one among those dear to you, and those I select are the best beloved."

This declaration was made in such a tone of voice that Madame De Lorris turned pale. She remembered that she had a daughter.

"I swear to be silent," Jeanne stammered.

"Swear with your hand upon this woman's corpse."

"Touch it! Do not exact that, I pray of you."

"It must be done. Oh! fear not that she will arise to reproach you for not succoring her. She sleeps, never to awaken. You are afraid and tremble; so much the better! You will not forget having sworn, for she will appear to you in your dreams. But hasten—I have no time for you to recover from your excitement."

Jeanne conceived it to be sacrilege to place a hand upon that body, eternally motionless; but the murderer was in her presence, and she must obey. She extended her arm and touched with her finger-ends the dead woman's hair, while saying in a stifled voice:

"I swear that I will never speak of what I have seen!"

"It is well," resumed the man. "Remember, henceforth you belong to me. Everywhere you go you will be watched. I will know all you will do and all you will say, and you must act accordingly. Now you can go. Where did you enter Rodin's?"

"By the other wing."

"Then emerge by the same way, and, upon leaving this room, lock the door behind you, as I will give you the key, for it is important that none should know that the door has been opened to-night. I presume you will meet no one on the way out. You must be in the street five minutes before me, and I give you five minutes to descend; for, should you exceed that time, I shall imagine you gossiping with Rodin or her serving-girls, and my vengeance will be prompt. Come!" said the man, releasing his captive. And before she had time to turn around to catch sight of him he had extinguished the candle. Then, returning to Jeanne, he took her by the hand, placed in it the key taken from the lock, and led her forward. He reached the door without stumbling over the furniture, as he was familiar with the locality, and, before restoring his prisoner to liberty, said to her in a low tone of voice: "A sealed mouth, or death!"

She heard, not with quivering, this terrible mandate; still she failed not in obeying his direction, and, upon the turning of the key in the lock and the shooting of the bolt, all her thoughts concentrated upon flight.

The chambermaid was not at her post upon the landing; still, as Madame De Lorris understood the method of opening the door, after a precipitate descent of the stairway she found herself upon the free pavement of Paris. She saw nothing to disquiet her, as the Rue de Pouthien is little frequented in the evening and the stores are closed early. A fine rain was falling; belated pedestrians were hurrying home and at fifty paces from Valentine's house lamps were burning on a carriage stationed at the corner of the Rue Fortin.

Reassured by this rapid inspection, Madame De Lorris started forth, and by gliding along the walls reached the Rue de Berry without any inconvenience. Her coachman, annoyed at his long detention, opened the door for his mistress and whipped up the bay mare into a rapid gait. Within a few minutes she retired within her mansion in the Avenue d'Eylan.

She fervently trusted that the assassin would not seek her in her home, as she believed he had not followed her.

We willingly believe in what we desire, and are oftentimes deceived.

BASEBALL.

DETROIT vs. PHILADELPHIA.

It is surprising how well and how badly at times the Philadelphia team can play ball. Moreover, a peculiarity of their work is that they will hold the banner of victory in their grasp almost to the end of a fight, and then let it slip out of their hands in the most aggravating manner. This was the case on the occasion of their game in Detroit July 31. Up to the eighth inning the Detroits led by only a single run, then Purcell did some bad throwing, and the result was disastrous, as the score below shows:

The game between these clubs Aug. 1 was in some respects a repetition of the preceding one, but the visitors failed to hit Weidman as freely as Shaw, and their few safe hits were scattered. Hagan's delivery was very wild, and whenever he got the ball over the plate it was hit. A very neat double-play was made by McClellan, Warner and Ferguson, by allowing a fly to touch the ground instead of catching it. Weidman prevented a double-play by not running after hitting the ball. Score:

The Detroits defeated the Philadelphias Aug. 2 for the eighth time. The home-team earned all of their six runs, pounding Coleman's delivery very freely. Faultless fielding by the visitors kept the score down. A brilliant double-play was effected by Purcell and Ferguson, after the former had made a difficult running-catch. Jones' pitching puzzled the Philadelphias, and the two runs they got were presented to them by Houck and Farrell. In the first inning Hanlon prevented a double-play by refusing to run after hitting the ball. Score:

BOSTON vs. CLEVELAND.

The Boston team delighted their friends and disgusted the crowd of spectators in Cleveland July 31 by defeating the home-team. The fun began in the second inning, when the visitors got in five runs, chiefly through fielding errors. The home-team rallied in the third inning and hit Buffinton's pitching so freely that the visitors deemed it advisable to call in Whitney from the outfield. The run-getting was then stopped, so far as Cleveland was concerned. The visitors punished Daly's pitching for three earned runs. The Bostons outfielded the Clevelands in nearly every position. A decidedly unsatisfactory condition of affairs prevailed Aug. 1, owing to the failure of Sawyer, the appointed pitcher of the day, to put in a timely appearance. In consequence Daly had to go in, and the result was that he was badly punished for four earned runs and fourteen safe hits in five innings. By this time Sawyer had arrived and dressed to play, and on the plea of Daly being disabled Captain York claimed the right to sub-stitute Sawyer in the sixth inning, and Sawyer went in to pitch. To this the Bostons objected. Thereupon a dispute arose, and the contest then and there ended, as neither captain would recede from his position. The issue is to be decided by Secretary Young, to whom the case has been appealed. The score at the time stood as follows:

ECLIPSE vs. ST. LOUIS.

On July 30 the visiting team from St. Louis played the Eclipse nine in Louisville, Ky., again, and this time had to succumb to the superior pitching and batting of the home-nine. The pitching and batting of Hecker and Wolf and Will Gleason's fielding were the features of a brilliant and hard-earned victory. Score:

The Eclipse nine again struck victory on the home-field on July 31, after a close and exciting contest, as the score shows. This was the last game of their series together. The feature of the game was the fine fielding of W. Gleason and Comiskey for the visitors, and Latham and Maskrey for the home-nine. Hecker and W. Gleason led in batting with three hits each.

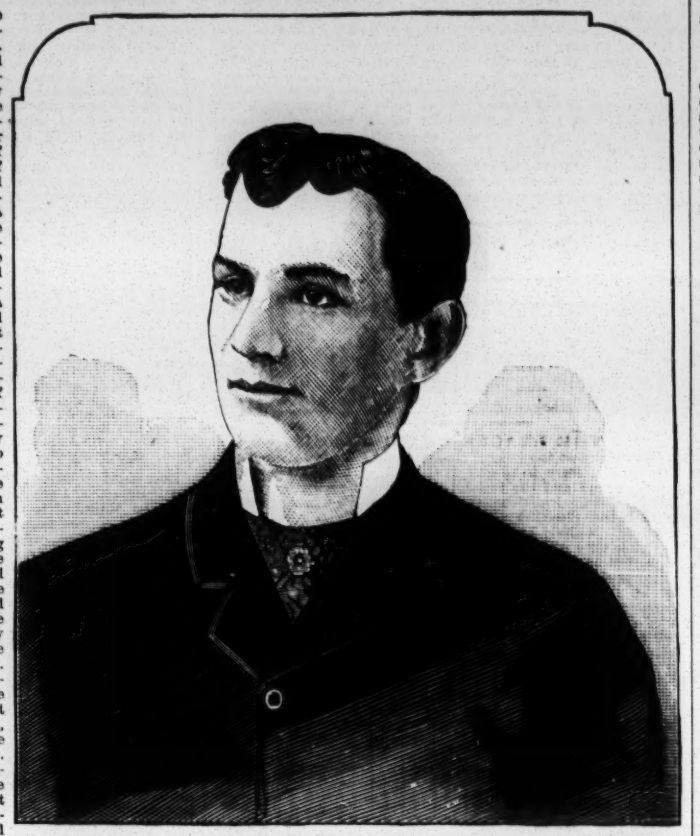
SULLIVAN of the Eclipse Club of Louisville has lost all hope of playing ball again this season. He will return to his home in Providence in a few days. The Courier-Journal states that his physicians say his leg will not be well for some months, if at all.

FOLEY is once more disabled, and will probably not again enter the field this season.

DANIEL STEARNS,



whose portrait is here given, is one of the most promising young players of the professional fraternity. He hails from Buffalo, N. Y., and has but recently attained his majority. Stearns figured prominently with amateur clubs of his native city for several seasons before commencing his professional career in August, 1880, as the short-stop of the Buffalo Club, taking the place of Fulmer, released. He continued with the Buffalos during the remainder of that season, acting as a general-utility man, playing on the bases, in the outfield and occasionally going behind the bat, where he did good service. Stearns also did clever work in handling the bat, being credited in his initial game as a professional with three safe and timely hits, each of which brought in a run. His next professional engagement was in 1882 with the Cincinnati Club, commencing as right-fielder, and during the last half of the championship season succeeding Luff at first base. Stearns' splendid batting and admirable base-play materially helped the Cincinnatis to win the championship of the American Association, and it may be mentioned here that he ranked in batting seventh of the sixty-eight players of that association, this being a remarkable record for so young a player. Manager Barnie of the Baltimore Club, with his usual shrewdness, selected Stearns as one of his team for this season, and that the choice was a judicious one has been amply evidenced so far by Stearns' fine fielding at first base and his remarkably hard hitting. In a recent game with the Metropolitans at Oriole Park, Baltimore, he was credited with one of the longest hits ever made on the local grounds, scoring a clean home-run before the ball was fielded into the diamond. During his brief professional career he has earned an enviable reputation as a reliable and earnest young player, and his quiet and unassuming deportment both on and off the ball-field has gained him a large circle of friends.

CHICAGO vs. NEW YORK.

The champions narrowly escaped defeat at the hands of the New York team in Chicago, Ill., July 31, being outbatted by two earned runs to one, and ten base-hits to four. But the visitors offset their good work with the ash by a very poor exhibition in the field, and this enabled the Chicagos to recover their lost ground, and finally to win the match by a single run. Ward pitched with telling effect, the home-team scoring but four base-hits, but the infield errors proved very damaging, as did those at right-field. Score:

The New Yorks secured a decisive victory over the Chicagos Aug. 1, and thus turned the tables on the League champions. Welch was wonderfully effective, Gore being the only one of the home-team to hit safely, which he did twice. The Chicagos got only one man as far as third base. The New Yorks hit Corcoran hard and freely, bunching their hits in two innings, when they earned three runs. The score:

The game between these clubs Aug. 2 was characterized by by sharp and brilliant fielding. Flint was laid off and Sunday played in his place. The Chicagos bunched four safe hits in the sixth inning, when they earned three runs. Errors by Connor and Pierce and a two-bagger by Gore yielded two more runs to the home-team. The New Yorks earned their only run off a three-baser by Pierce and a two-bagger by Ewing. Williamson, Sunday, Pfeffer and Connor made wonderful catches, the last-named accomplishing thereby an unaided double-play. Score:

ATHLETIC vs. ALLEGHENY.

The game between the above-named clubs July 31 was marked by heavy batting and loose fielding. Neagle only pitched one inning and then gave way to Taylor, who was hit all over the field. Corey commenced pitching for the Athletics, but was hit so hard in three innings that he relinquished his position to Bradley in the seventh. Mathews sprained his ankle in the second inning, and Crowley took his place. Moynahan and Barr excelled in batting. The Athletics won by the appended score:

In Philadelphia, Pa., on Aug. 1 the Athletic team closed their series of games with the Alleghenys by whipping them in a slugging match marked by the one-sided score of 19 to 2. The home-team were in winning form, and, finding Neagle off in his pitching, they went in to run up averages, knowing that they had the game in hand. Neagle pitched the first five innings for the visitors, and the Athletics made ten hits off him. The Alleghenys then made a general change of position, McLaughlin coming in to pitch, Swartwood to catch, Barr first, Dickerson short-stop, Neagle right and Taylor centre-field. The home-nine only made four hits off McLaughlin, but two were for three bases each. In the field the Alleghenys gave a miserable exhibition, the fielding of Battin and Mansell—the latter making three excellent catches—being the only redeeming features. For the home-nine Knight made two excellent running-catches, Birchall made a good catch and Corey covered third admirably. About three thousand were present, but the game was too one-sided for much enthusiasm.

BUFFALO vs. PROVIDENCE.

Few in the East here expected any other result of the Western meeting between these clubs in Buffalo July 31 than that the visitors would do as they had done easily before, viz., win the majority of the games; but this time the Buffalos caught Harry Wright's team, weakened by the enforced absence of Radbourn, and, as Sweeny's pitching was just what the home-team liked, the issue of the contest was defeat for the leaders in the pennant-race, as will be seen by the score.

BURNING OF A THEATRE AND LOSS OF LIFE.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Aug. 5.

A fire destroyed the Winter Garden after the performance of Aug. 3. The body of Harry Morgan, a member of the dramatic company, was found in the ruins. His funeral is to take place 7, under the direction of S. F. Lodge, No. 3, B. P. O. Elks. The instruments and the wardrobe of the Spanish Students were totally destroyed. They are to appear for the last time in this city next week. The fire broke out about one o'clock A. M. Aug. 4 in the theatre, which was a long frame structure, covered with an asphaltum roof and surrounded by other old frame buildings. The flames spread so rapidly that within fifteen minutes buildings on either side of the theatre were in flames, and the heat was so intense that it was impossible to enter them....There was little worthy of note in amusement circles during the past week. At the Baldwin Theatre tonight Maud Granger's engagement closed. Agnes Herndon is to open Aug. 6, starring in "Led Astray," supported by a company including George Wessells, Henry Aveling and Adele Waters. Modjeska is to reappear 7 as Mary Stuart for the orphans' benefit. Callender's Minstrels are due 13..... Daly's Company at the California Theatre has not made the success expected. The Union-square Theatre Co. in "The Banker's Daughter" open 13. Minnie Conway Tearle is announced to be in the cast.....Sol Smith Russell made his first appearance here in "Edgewood Folks" Aug. 4 at the Bush-street Theatre, and met with success. The support was poor, with the exception of Allen and Bond.....At the Standard Theatre Emerson's Minstrels are playing to excellent business.....At the Tivoli "Standing-room Only" is displayed to-night, and "Martha" will probably have a run. "The Magic Flute" is to follow.....At the Grand Opera-house "Youth" has not made the success hoped for, the business having been anything but large and by no means what the merit of the play and the excellence of its performance deserved. "The White Slave" is to be produced 6, with Hawkins & Courtright's Minstrels in the plantation scenes. John A. Stevens in "Unknown" is to open 13.....Lillian F. Smith, the "champion shot," and the Davis Bros., juvenile club-swingers, are to open at the Adelphi 6.....John Cain has been engaged at the Fountain.....Griffin and Rice, song-and-dance, have been engaged to appear with Emerson's Minstrels.....Arrived during the past week: Dan Shelby, Charles H. McConnell and Charles Blanchett.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 7.

Corinne's "Merrymakers" appeared at the Oakland Garden last night to very good business. The Olympia Quartet was an added attraction to the bill, and the result was a good show enthusiastically received.....At the Museum the closing week of comic opera was opened last night with "The Chimes of Normandy." The attendance was large, and the opera was creditably sung throughout, Marie Jansen's Serpolette, John Howson's Gaspard, and Walt. Hamshire's Grenicheux being the best features of the performance. Howson's Gaspard was particularly strong.....The Rose Sanger Specialty Burlesque Company opened last night under canvas in the Park-square grounds, just vacated by Stevens' Circus. Good business had been expected, but not such a rush as occurred was ever dreamed of. The tent was crowded at eight o'clock, and I judge that 1,000 people must have been turned away. The bill was long and good, Dutch Daly and Maggie Cline making particular hits. It would seem that Manager John D. Hopkins has hit the public taste, and he says he will stay three months, possibly bringing out light opera later.....At the Boylston Museum yesterday's business was heavy, and Dan Hart seemed to be the favorite in the ollo.

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.

Haverly's Theatre was reopened last evening after the Summer vacation. During the time it was closed the interior was handsomely redecorated, and numerous improvements were made in the seating arrangements. The new season opened with the production for the first time here of "The Silver King," and a large audience witnessed the performance. The play was handsomely staged and favorably received. Osmond Tearle and Rose Coghlan were honored with recalls. ....."A Mountain Pink" entered upon its second week at the Grand Opera-house to a good attendance. Since the first performance, last week, the play has been improved by judicious alterations and eliminations, and a very smooth performance is now given. It may fairly be said to have scored a success. It will run until further notice..... There was no performance at McVicker's Theatre last evening, the doors being closed to permit perfect preparation for the production of "Youth" this evening. This is the sixth week of the Boston Theatre Company's engagement at this house. Business has been only fair thus far.....The Thomas concert at the Exposition Building, fifth and last week of the season, was largely attended.....The George Edgar Combination makes its appearance at Hooley's Theatre next week. The opening performance will be "King Lear."

BRADFORD, Pa., Aug. 7.

Thatcher, Primrose & West's Minstrels crowded Wagner's Opera-house last night .....Ida Siddons' Female Mastodons packed the Gem Theatre. Route: Bolivar Aug. 13, Olean 14 Oil City 15, Franklin 16, Sharon 17, Newcastle 18.

HARTFORD, Ct., has the baseball fever again, and will be represented next season by a strong professional team. New inclosed grounds have been fitted up at the corner of Ward and Broad streets, where the Cleveland Club is booked to play Sept. 20. Ben Douglas, who organized and managed the original professional clubs in Hartford and Providence, is taking a lively interest in the proposed revival.

THE COLUMBUS CLUB defeated the Clevelands Aug. 6 in Columbus, O., by a score of 7 to 6. The home-team led off with five runs, Mann making a home-run when three men were on the bases. Sawyer pitched for the Clevelands.

THE AMERICAN CHAMPIONSHIP.

The contest for the pennant in the American arena is becoming deeply interesting so far as the games of at least five of the eight clubs are concerned; for there is now no possible show for the success of either the Columbus, Allegheny or Baltimore nines, all three of which are hopelessly in the rear. But what these three can do in winning games this month and next will of course have an important bearing on the forward movements of the leaders. Thus far it is "nip and tuck" between the St. Louis and Athletic teams, while Cincinnati is rapidly pulling up to close quarters with both. The Eclipse have lost ground lately, which almost throws them out of the chance they before had for getting to the front. The teams of both East and West, after playing among themselves for two weeks, will all play together in the East. Record to Aug. 6, inclusive:

	Athletic.	Baltimore.	Cincinnati.	Columbus.	Eclipse.	Metropolitan.	St. Louis.	Won.
Allegheny	2	6	3	2	2	5	1	21

THE LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP.

The record of the League championship contests shows the Providence team to be still in the van, with the Clevelands a close second and the Chicagos a good third. Boston stands fourth and the Buffalos fifth, leaving New York in sixth place, with Detroit close behind them. Philadelphia is hopelessly in the rear. As New York has ten games to play with the Philadelphias they will be likely to pull out of their present position, but it is doubtful if they can get nearer the goal than third position, and that will need a strong up-hill piece of work to be done. This week the clubs of the two sections play home-and-home games together. The New Yorks will play the Philadelphias, the Providences with the Bostons, the Chicagos with the Detroits, and the Buffalos with the Clevelands. The record to Aug. 6, inclusive, is:

	Boston.	Buffalo.	Chicago.	Cleveland.	Detroit.	New York.	Philadelphia.	Providence.	Won.
Boston	..	4	3	7	7	3	10	2	36
Buffalo	6	..	3	2	6	7	5	4	33

THE EASTERN CLUBS' TOUR WEST.

The end of the last tour the Eastern clubs will take westward this season gives occasion for a statistical review of the work they accomplished while out West. They began the games of the tour in Buffalo and Detroit on July 9, and in Chicago and Cleveland July 10, and the last games of the series were played in all of these cities Aug. 4. In their four weeks' sojourn out West the Eastern teams played seventy-one games in all, and of these they won only twenty-five. In fact, to all but the Boston team the trip was a disastrous one, and especially so to the Providence team, as they lost not fewer than ten out of the eighteen games they played, losing every one during the last week of the tour. The New York team lost no fewer than thirteen out of the nineteen games they played; while out of Philadelphia's seventeen games they won but three. This is a worse record than that of the Worcesters in 1882 at the same date. The first week of the tour the Philadelphias lost all five of the games they played, and the Clevelands won all of their five. In the second week the Detroits lost all of the four games they played, while Providence won all of their four. In the last week, however, Providence played five games, and lost them all, while both Boston and Buffalo played four games each and won all. Buffalo carried off the honors of the trip by winning no fewer than sixteen games of the twenty they played. Boston doing the best for the Eastern clubs by winning eight out of the seventeen they played. The record showing the victories and defeats of the clubs of each section during the tour is appended:

	Boston.	Providence.	New York.	Philadelphia.	Won.
Buffalo	4	5	4	3	16
Chicago	3	3	3	3	12
Cleveland	0	3	3	4	10
Detroit	2	0	3	3	8
Lost	9	10	13	14	46

	Buffalo.	Chicago.	Cleveland.	Detroit.	Won.
Boston	1	1	4	2	8
Providence	0	1	2	5	8
New York	2	1	2	1	6
Philadelphia	1	1	0	1	3
Lost	4	4	8	9	25

THE INTERSTATE ASSOCIATION.

Secretary Williams has decided that the championship games played by the disbanded Merritt Club must be counted. The record to Aug. 6, inclusive, computed on the basis of the best percentage of victories, shows the six contestants to be occupying the following relative positions:

	Harrisburg.	Brooklyn.	Active.	Anthracite.	Trenton.	Quickstep.	Merritt.	Games Won.
Harrisburg	..	5	6	5	4	6	1	27
Brooklyn	5	..	3	6	4	3	1	22

PHILADELPHIA vs. DETROIT.

The above-named clubs met again in Detroit, Mich., Aug. 4, when the Detroits were blanked, and the Philadelphias, after three successive defeats, earned a decisive victory. The Detroits failed to bat Coleman at critical moments, and their safe hits were few and scattering. A three-bagger by Coleman and a single by Ferguson earned a run for the Philadelphias in the second inning. A home-run by Farrar, a three-bagger by Harbidge, two-basers by Warner and Gross, and a single by McClellan, aided by a wild throw by Trott in the seventh inning, yielded five more runs to the visitors. Purcell made a remarkable running-catch. The score:

FRANK LARKIN, the second-baseman of the Metropolitan team of 1882, who a few months ago, while drunk, shot his wife and cut his own throat, was arrested again on July 30. While in the hospital he tried to kill himself by jumping head first off his bed upon an iron register. He recovered, as did his wife, who carefully nursed him, and who refused to give the evidence on which alone he could be convicted, and consequently he was discharged from custody. Since then he has been drunk much of the time, and often in jail. He was arrested this time on complaint of his wife, whom he had brutally beaten. She says she is afraid that he will kill her. He was sentenced to six months' imprisonment in the Kings County Penitentiary on Aug. 1.

GEORGE WRIGHT fielded and batted brilliantly in the two games he played with the Cottage Citys last week, although he had not played baseball before this season.

ATHLETIC vs. BALTIMORE.

The eleventh championship game between the above-named clubs was played Aug. 3 in Philadelphia, Pa., and attracted upwards of three thousand spectators. The visitors easily punished Bradley's pitching, but failed to bunch their hits, except in the second and eighth innings. In the second a two-bagger by Clinton sent home three men after the side should have been out. Immediately afterward Corey captured a hot liner and "doubled-up" Clinton, which prevented the visitors from increasing the score. In the eighth three safe hits, including a three-baser by Leary, earned two runs for the Baltimores. Wild pitching by Henderson and errors by Say and Leary gave the Athletics nine runs and the victory. Rowe and O'Brien led in batting. O'Brien made some difficult catches, and Corey fielded finely at third base. Score:

Over eight thousand people witnessed the Athletics defeat the Baltimores Aug. 4 after an exceedingly exciting contest of ten innings. Manning, late of the Brooklyn Club, made his first appearance with the Baltimores, who again both outbatted and outfielded their opponents. Clever base-running by Birchall and Stricker, however, yielded the victory to the home-team. An error by Stricker made the game a ten-inning one, and his run in the last inning won the game, a passed ball letting him in after he had been given his base on balls, with two men out. A wonderful running-catch was made by Birchall, and Corey captured a hot liner. The score was:

The Baltimores beat the Athletics Aug. 6 by a streak of hard hitting at the outset. Bakely was put in as pitcher of the home-team, but was knocked out in the first inning, when two-baggers by Clinton and Gardner and singles by Stearns, McCormick and Emslie, together with two muffs by Corey, yielded seven runs to the Baltimores. Bradley then came in to pitch, and held the Baltimores down to eight scattering safe hits during the remainder of the contest. The Athletics made a good up-hill fight, but were unable to overcome their opponents' long lead. Emslie pitched very wildly, the Athletics reaching first base nine times on called balls, although they could get only four safe hits off him. Clinton and Manning excelled in fielding, while Gardner led in batting for the winners. The score:

COLUMBUS vs. ECLIPSE.

The above-named clubs met for the eleventh time Aug. 3 in Columbus, O., the home-team then winning after a close and exciting contest. The Columbus gained the lead in the second and third innings, when they scored two unearned runs. The visitors tied the score in the fourth, when errors by Wheeler and Smith, together with a single by Browning and a two-bagger by Whiting, allowed two men to cross the home-plate. The score stood tied until the last half of the ninth inning, when a safe hit by Richmond and a wild throw by Weaver enabled the home-team to make the winning run before a man was out. Mountain and Weaver pitched effectively for their respective clubs. The score was:

The home team suffered a disastrous defeat at the hands of the visitors Aug. 4, when Hecker and Dundon pitched for their respective clubs. Dundon's delivery was ineffective from the start, the visitors earning five runs in the fifth inning, when Smith relieved him with little better success. Hecker held the home-team down to eight scattering safe hits. After the fourth inning the game was one-sided and uninteresting. The score:

The Columbus Club defeated the Eclipse Aug. 5 in the presence of two thousand people. Weaver was pounded all over the field, fifteen safe hits, including five three-baggers, being made off his delivery. The visitors also batted Mountain freely, but could not hit safely at the critical moment. Gerhardt reappeared with the Eclipse for the first time since his stroke of paralysis in St. Louis. The chief feature of the contest was the heavy batting of the home-team. The fielding of Richmond and Gerhardt was especially fine.

METROPOLITAN vs. ALLEGHENY.

The eleventh championship game between the above-named clubs was played Aug. 3 at the Polo Grounds. The Alleghenys led off with two runs on safe hits by Dickerson and Hayes and errors by Crane and Kennedy. Holbert's poor catching in the fourth inning gave the visitors two additional runs. The Mets secured their three runs on a like number of safe hits, together with a wild throw by Dickerson and passed balls. The Mets did the best batting, but failed to bunch their hits, and consequently were defeated. The umpiring was thoroughly impartial and satisfactory. The score:

A DISORDERLY SCENE.

The game at the Polo Grounds on Aug. 4, proved to be an exceptional contest, alike in regard to the close character of the contest itself—the game requiring fourteen innings to be played before it was finished—but especially in regard to the disorderly scene which occurred in the ninth inning. The game opened with the promise of a close fight, sharp fielding being the order from the start. In the second inning the Alleghenys scored a run, and it was in this inning that the partisan feeling of the betting men, who had taken up their position on the grand-stand, began to manifest itself in the customary hissing and jeering of the umpire. The game proceeded, with exciting alternations, in the lead, the Alleghenys closing the third inning with the figures at 1 to 0 in their favor, and the Metropolitans the fourth with the score at 2 to 1 in their favor. By the end of the sixth inning the home-team had increased their lead to 3 to 1, and the seventh closed with the game in the same position. In the eighth the visitors opened on Keefe with good effect, three bases on hits—two singles and a double—aided by a wild pitch and an error by Reipschlager, who caught in place of Holbert, giving them three runs and the lead by 4 to 3. It was now that the crowd began to get excited, and some of the occupants of the grand-stand worked their customary "racket" of trying to bulldoze the umpire. Thus far he had taken no notice of their abuse, and certainly none was taken of it by either the members of the Exhibition Company present or Manager Mutrie. The ninth inning was commenced amidst great excitement, the position of the umpire becoming more and more unpleasant as the contest proceeded. In this inning Battin was at the bat, and had had two strikes called on him, when a ball came in which was called a ball instead of a strike, as some of the spectators wanted it to be called. Whereupon one man jumped to his feet, and in a loud voice called out to the umpire: "Come here, Walsh," at the same time beckoning to him with his hand; "come here; your money is all safe. They are a run ahead. Let the game go." This direct imputation of dishonorable conduct was more than the umpire could stand, and he at once called "Time," stopped the game, and requested the police to remove the offender from the grounds. This request was not complied with, however, and, what with calls from part of the assemblage to put the man out, and the rally of others in defense of the disturber, it began to look as if a rather ugly disturbance would take place. When Mr. Walsh asked the police captain why he refused to arrest the man he explained that the State law did not empower the police to interfere unless called upon to suppress a breach of the peace. Had the manager or any of the club officials attempted to remove the offender, and he had resisted, then they could have called on the police to aid them. But this not being done, the police could not take action until some overt act had been committed. There is hardly a question that the club managers have the power to remove anyone from the stand or the grounds who by word or act does anything to create a disturbance; but the club officials must be the first to act in the premises, and then, if resisted, they can legally call in the aid of the police. The rules of the American Association governing a case of this kind are as follow:

Every club is bound to maintain order on its own grounds and to protect the umpire and players from the insolence, insults and aggravating remarks or actions of spectators, at any time during the progress of a game any spectator uses loud, insolent, insulting or aggravating language towards any player, or by act or word, directly or indirectly, purposely annoys or excites a player, the player may appeal to the umpire for protection, and it shall be the duty of the umpire to call time and notify such offender that he will be expelled from the ground if such offense is repeated. Should said warning not be heeded, the umpire shall call upon the captain of the home-club to compel the removal of such offender from the grounds; and if such offender be not so removed, the umpire may declare the game forfeited to the visiting club. The umpire shall in like manner have the power to protect himself and the dignity of his position from similar insults or annoyances.

If there was no power to remove this class of offenders, many of our professional ball-fields would soon be at the mercy of the rough-est class of the community, who revel in just such scenes as this, and rush to every place where there is a chance of such excitement and disturbance occurring. Finding that no redress could be had, the umpire quietly resumed his position, and the contest went on, with the result of a tie at the end of the ninth inning by 4 to 4, and it was not until the fourteenth that the home-team succeeded in making the winning run. Score:

There was quite a falling off in the attendance at the Polo Grounds on Aug. 6, on the occasion of the last match but one of the series between the Metropolitan and Allegheny Clubs, the almost entire absence of lady spectators being noticeable. During the contest a couple of fights occurred among the spectators to the left of the grand-stand; but President Day was present at this contest, and the offenders were promptly ejected. The umpire impartially discharged the unpleasant duties of his position, and displayed sound judgment in his decisions on close points, as in calling strikes and balls. This time there was but little betting on the result, as the Mets led from the start and never lost their grip of the game. Some splendid fielding was done by Nelson, especially in the fourth inning, when he put the side out by two fine catches and a wonderful pick-up and throw. Battin, too, on the other side, covered third base in fine style. A feature of the contest was the fine play at the bat of Nelson and Brady, who excelled alike in their base-hits and sacrifice-hits. The Allegheny batsmen, too, did some good hitting to right-field. Not a run was earned off the pitching on either side until the seventh inning, when Dickerson, Hayes and Battin earned one run, a wild pitch and passed ball giving a second run. The Mets earned their first run in the ninth inning by Crane and O'Rourke's hits. A pretty double-play by Crane and Brady was noteworthy, and Nelson, Crane and Brady would have had another but for the latter's muff, the only fielding error of the Mets' game, the others being battery errors. Merrill has the name of being the best short-stop in Maine, and also ranks high as a batsman, having won the prize offered by the college for the best batting this season, with a record of .322 base-hits.

THE DELAWARE CLUB of New York City defeated the Newark professionals July 31, by a score of 15 to 8.

THE AMATEUR ARENA.

There was quite an exciting time among the amateurs at Prospect Park, Brooklyn, Aug. 4, on the occasion of the third contest of the series between the Bedford and Commercial nines, the assemblage of spectators being the largest gathered at the Park Parade Grounds this season. Both teams were out in their full strength, and the contest was not only a close and exciting one, but it was marked by remarkably fine play on both sides, especially in the "battery" work. Everything went on smoothly and well until the ninth inning, at which time, when the Bedfords went to the bat in the last part of the inning, the score stood at 4 to 1 in favor of the Commercials. The first two strikers were finely disposed of, but Wilson, the third, hit a long fly ball to Connolly to left-field, and the ball, not being held, glanced from the fielder's hands into the crowd and ran under a gentleman's carriage on the drive. He says no one stopped it or interfered with it after it had been dropped by Connolly. It was promptly returned by the left-fielder to Donohue in time to keep Wilson at second base. Just at this time—the ball not having been held in his position by the pitcher—some of the players called out "Block ball," and Wilson started for third, but was touched en route and held to third base, the ball then being passed to the pitcher in his position. At this juncture the crowd rushed in, and all was noise, excitement and confusion. It was impossible to decide whether the ball was a "block" or not. The equitable way would have been to have sent Wilson back to second base, to which he was legitimately entitled, and then have cleared the field and gone on with the game. Finally, after considerable discussion, the umpire declared that the ball was a "block," and that Wilson was entitled to third base. He then put him at that base, had the field partially cleared, and called play. The Commercials refused to abide by the decision, preferring to forfeit the game, and then it was declared forfeited, under their protest, which will, of course, be duly acted upon by the Judiciary Committee of the Association. It was a great pity that the contest should have ended as it did, for up to the ninth inning the game was a model one, the play being up to the best professional-contest standard, and the conduct of the competing nines, in view of the exciting incidents of the game, creditable in the extreme.

BUFFALO vs. PROVIDENCE.

The Buffalos beat the Providences Aug. 4 in Buffalo, N. Y., for the fourth successive time. Heavy batting and numerous errors marked the playing of both clubs. Radbourn reappeared with the visitors in the pitcher's position, but was badly punished, especially by O'Rourke and Rowe. Galvin at the outset was also batted hard, the visitors gaining the lead in the fourth inning, when they made eight safe hits off him. The Buffalos made a gallant up-hill fight, and went to the front again in the seventh inning, when five hits and three errors resulted in six runs. Rowe commenced catching for the Buffalos, but gave way to O'Rourke in the fourth inning on account of a lame arm. Hines and Richardson did the best fielding. The score:

BROOKLYN vs. HARRISBURG.

The last game these clubs will play together took place at Harrisburg on Aug. 4, on which occasion the Brooklyns won, as will be seen by the appended score. The Harrisburg Patriot states that the visitors, guarded by the police, were stoned by the crowd on their way from the grounds. The umpire, too, had to be protected from the "hoodlums." Score:

BOSTON vs. CLEVELAND.

The Clevelands were defeated for the fourth time last week on their own grounds by the Bostons Aug. 4. Buffinton pitched in fine form for the visitors, the Clevelands being unable to do anything with him except in the seventh inning, when singles by Glasscock and Bushong and a two-bagger by Evans, aided by a muff by Whitney, gave them their three runs. Sutton and Morrill did nearly all the batting and rungetting for the Bostons. Score:

TROUBLE IN HARRISBURG.

Last May we called special attention to the not very creditable conduct of a minority of the Interstate Club team of Harrisburg on the occasion of their match at Prospect Park with the Brooklyn team, at which time Manager Myers, Shetzline, captain of the field, and the pitcher Schappert made themselves conspicuously offensive by their efforts to influence the decisions of the umpire by the bulldozing process. Since then the same tactics seem to have been at different times pursued when found necessary to aid them in securing a victory. Moreover, Schappert in his delivery of the ball to the bat has adopted a line of conduct which is hardly worthy a manly player, and one which is in direct violation of the Amer can rules of the game; and that is his intimidation of batsmen by sending the ball to them so as to either hit them or oblige them to look more to avoiding a dangerous blow than to hitting the ball. In order to attain the speed and command of the ball to do this he resorts to direct overhand throwing. We saw him violate the rules in this respect in the game in Brooklyn, in which Cassidy acted as umpire, and we asked Cassidy why he did not enforce the rule. Singularly enough, Cassidy thought that the two captains alone had all to say in the matter. Since then Umpire McCaffrey of the Interstate Association staff enforced the rule at Harrisburg on July 31, in one instance, and the result was almost a riot among the rougher partisans of the home-team; and the trouble seemed so serious that the umpire deemed it necessary for his personal safety to allow any further violation of the rule to go unpunished, the result being the defeat of the Brooklyn team. The game will, we are informed, be protested. It is stated that Secretary Richter requested the umpire on this occasion to let the violation pass unnoticed. On what grounds this was done should be stated, otherwise the secretary will be amenable to censure. Secretary Williams' attention is called to this matter, as it is the opening door to an evil which should be nipped in the bud.

PERRY MALONE, the veteran catcher and manager, contemplates re-entering the professional arena in the latter capacity, in which his tact and experience would make him a valuable acquisition to any club. He caught cleverly for the Athletic, Chicago and Philadelphia Clubs in his palmy days, and "coached" and successfully managed the Philadelphia, California and Atlantic City Clubs, the last-named having won last season the championship of New Jersey. His address is No. 1,109 Wellington street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THREE REVOLVERS.—The Union Club of Chicago on July 6 signed Eugene F. Vadebonoeur, and on July 11 Abner Powell and Chris. Fulmer, giving each advance-money and paying the expenses of the two last-named from Pawtucket, R. I., to Chicago. The three players were duly signed with contracts of the American Association Alliance, the Unions having made due application for membership therein, and in proof of which they hold Secretary Williams' letter acknowledging receipt thereof. The above-mentioned trio have deserted the Unions and joined the Peoria Club. The Unions will immediately take steps to have them expelled, in which case the American Association will demand that the Northwestern League prevent these three revolvers from playing with the Peoria Club.

IRISH ATHLETIC CLUB.

The "patron" of the Irish Athletic Club of Boston, Mass., has established itself as one of the leading athletic events of the Summer in that vicinity. This year the committee bestirred itself more actively than ever to make the affair a success, offering $1,000 in prizes and attracting good fields of entries. Wednesday, Aug. 1, was a delightful day, and several thousands enjoyed the fun at Highland-lake Grove. First on the programme was a boxing bout between Patsey Sheppard and Tim McCarty. Then the champion, John L. Sullivan, drove the crowd enthusiastic as he donned the mittens with Pete McCoy. J. J. Bagley and young Daley next illustrated the Græco-Roman wrestling art, each winning a fall. E. S. Hunt of Norwood and P. J. Griffin of East Boston then each won a fall in a collar-and-elbow competition. Competitive club-swinging between Henry Price of East Boston, J. F. Martin of Cambridge and Thomas Drohan of South Boston, the latter being declared the winner, closed the exercises in the pavilion, and the crowd repaired to the open air games, of which the following is the record:

Amateur standing long-jump—M. Bolan, 12ft. 7in.; J. Bonner, 12ft. 2in.; E. Drew, 11ft. 1½in. A protest was entered against the winner on the ground that he was a professional. Prizes, gold and silver medals.

Three standing-jumps—J. F. Hartnett, 39ft. 2¾in.; J. Kennedy, 38ft. 2in.; J. Griffin, 30ft. 11in.; J. Sullivan, 34ft. 4in. Prizes, $10 and $5.

Running hop-step-and-jump—J. Sullivan, 42ft. 10in.; J. Hartnett, 40ft. 7in.; J. Roddington, 38ft. 2in.; J. Kennedy, 35ft. 2in. Prizes, $10 and $5.

Running high-jump—John Sullivan, 5ft. 4in.; J. Kennedy, 5ft. 2in. Prizes, $10 and $5.

Pole-vault, amateur—E. Drew, 8ft. 11in.; J. Welsh, second. Prize, a gold medal.

Pole-vault, professional—J. Hartnett and J. Kennedy tied at 8ft. 4in. Prizes, $10 and $5.

Throwing 16lb weight—J. Roddington, 41ft. 5½in.; J. Kennedy, 42ft.; J. Hartnett, 39ft. 10in.; Callernack, 38ft. 10in. Prizes, $10 and $5.

Throwing 56lb weight—H. West, 27ft. 4in.; J. Griffin, 23ft. 8in.; J. Roddington, 20ft. 6½in.; J. Kennedy, 20ft. Prizes, $10 and $5.

Throwing 16lb weight, amateur—J. Cunningham, 34ft. 6in.; Neil Dority, 33ft. 11in.; J. Bonner, 32ft. 2in.; E. Drew, 29ft. 6in. Prizes, gold and silver medals.

Standing high-jump—J. Kennedy, 4ft. 4in.; J. Hartnett, 4ft. 3in. Prizes, $10 and $5.

Putting 16lb weight, exhibition—J. Roddington, 36ft. 2in.; J. Kennedy, 38ft. 1in.

One-mile run, amateur—Hart of Springfield first, Corcoran of Lawrence second. Prizes, gold and silver medals.

Three mile run—John Hourihan of Cambridge first, James Morrett of Lowell second. Prizes, $20 and $10.

Thomas Riley, who was billed as the "champion short-distance swimmer of America," swam about a mile, ran a mile and walked a mile in 54 minutes.

One of the most interesting events of the day was the hurling-match between the Boston Hurling Club and a picked team, for the cup presented by John Boyle O'Reilly. The Bostons won the first goal in less than five minute, and the second one after a little longer play. John D Driscoll umpired for the Bostons and E. W. Barry for the picked team. Mr. Forrester was the referee. In the Irish reel-and-jig, J. Finley won the prize of $10. J. Leavitt of Milton won the swimming-match, and received the prize of $10. The judges were John Miller, T. Deasey, Timothy Murphy, Chas. Linnihan, Maurice Dinneen, John O'Connell, Col. Lawrence J. Logan and Daniel P. Toomey. At the close of the games C. Sullivan of Charlestown and T. N. Hinchy of Northampton engaged in a special hop-step-and-jump match for $50 a side, Sullivan clearing 42ft. and Hinchy 41ft. Our correspondent informs us that the distances given in the above report are unreliable.

LACROSSE.

On Friday, July 27, was witnessed one of the most exciting games of lacrosse ever played at Niagara Falls, between the Athletics of St. Catherines and the Dominions of the former place. The attendance was large, with a great number of ladies, who became as enthusiastic over the game as the other sex. Shortly after four o'clock the ball was faced for the first game, and after a short time game was claimed by the Dominions, who put the rubber between the flags, but game was not allowed them by the umpire. After ten minutes' play the first game was won by the Athletics. The second was stubbornly contested, and several times the Dominions' flags were in imminent danger, but Stonewall Bowen and Ironclad Maloney prevented the rubber from getting between the flags, and finally fortune smiled on the Dominions, who won this game after playing 1h. 47m. Flynn, Bampfield and Mullen carried off the honors for the Dominions. The two next games were taken by the Dominions, thus winning the match by 3 to 1, after a hard-fought contest. The next day the Dominions played the Mechanics of St. Catherines and won three games to none. The Dominions feel very much elated over their two victories in succession, especially over such an old club as the Athletics.

HOYLE AND ACTON'S HANDICAP.

This three-hundred-yards event was decided at Pastime Park, Philadelphia, Aug. 4, about three hundred spectators being present.

First heat: W. Eisenhower, 26 yards start, first; W. Sheppard, 18, second, by six feet; Fred Ernst, 14, third; J. Adams, 27, 0; E. White, 32, 0. Second heat: J. Coogan, 22, first; T. Bancroft, 17, second; C. Miller, 30, third; G. Wilde, N. R., 24, 0; W. Bergoon, 21, 0. Third heat: S. Cavanaugh, 28, first; J. MacManus, 28, second; W. Campbell, 29, third; J. Fox, 26, 0; W. Latch, 25, 0; E. R. Cresswell, 12, 0. Fourth heat: T. Brown, 21, first; R. Plunkett, 16, second; J. McBride, 28, third; James John, 12, 0. Final heat: S. Cavanaugh, 24, first; J. Brown, 21, second; J. Coogan, 22, third; W. Eisenhower, 5, fourth. It being plain to the officials that the final heat had been fixed beforehand for Cavanaugh, against whom the odds were ten to one, to win, Brown, Coogan and Eisenhower were suspended from running on that track for a year. Referee, Wm. Cummings; pistol-firer, A. Chambers.

STEELE vs. HERBERT.

It is charged that in the recent Elmira race between these men Steele double-crossed Herbert's backer, James R. Deegan of the Ashland Hotel, Ashland, Pa., first agreeing to lose and then "running it out" on Herbert. As intimated last week, the latter's backers enjoined the stakeholder for the match and a stakeholder for bets amounting to about $1,200 from giving up the money to Steele's friends. The result of the action taken was the return of the amount to those who had deposited it; so that if there was any such agreement, as alleged by Deegan and denied by Steele, it failed to accomplish its swindling purpose, and has only resulted in casting suspicion upon all parties concerned in the match. Steele, at least, could scarcely afford to have anything of this sort happen.

CUMMINGS AND STEELE MATCHED.

A match has been finally made between William Cummings and William Steele to run ten miles, for the sum of $500 a side, at Brooks' Running Grounds, Blossburg, Pa., on Saturday, Aug. 18. The men are to be at their stations at half-past five o'clock P. M., and are to start by the first report of pistol; either man leaving his station before the pistol is fired, to be put back five yards each time. We now hold three hundred dollars a side on account of the match, and the final deposit, two hundred dollars from each party, falls due Aug. 11. Arthur Chambers has been chosen final stake-holder, referee and starter. The backers of Cummings insisted upon either receiving $100 for expenses to go to Blossburg, or giving the same amount to come here, and having communicated this fact to Steele we on Aug. 7 received a dispatch saying that he would give the amount named.

HARTNETT AND SULLIVAN of Boston are matched to compete with Aitken and Lynch of Providence in seven competitions on the Boston Baseball Ground Monday, Aug. 13, at 3 P. M. Thomas Butler of Boston will be referee.

THE KEARNS-WARBURTON three-mile race, for $100 a side, will take place at the South Framingham, Mass., Fair-grounds Aug. 22, at 4 P. M.

PHILADELPHIA CALEDONIANS.—The Caledonian Club of Philadelphia will hold their twenty-

ATHLETIC.

WILLIAM H. ROBERTSON.

This well-known amateur runner, whose portrait appears on the first page of this paper, is a native of Scotland, having been born in Edinburgh on March 4, 1859, stands 5 feet 3½ inches in height, and his weight in condition is 109lb. He was brought to this country by his parents at the tender age of two years, and was, we believe, reared in Brooklyn, N. Y. About six years ago he began to figure conspicuously at amateur athletic meetings, and speedily acquired the reputation of being both a fleet and lasting runner. The principal events in which he participated, with their result, were as follow: Jan. 3, 1879, won the one-mile handicap at N. Y. A. C. games at Madison-square Garden from the 50-yards mark, in 4m. 55s. Same place, Jan. 9, won the five-miles scratch-race given by the Knickerbocker Club, defeating thirty-five competitors and winning easily in 30m. 15s.—a best-on-record. Same year, won the three-mile scratch-race at the Union Athletic Club's Summer games in Boston, Mass., in 16m. 42s. At the Brooklyn Club's games, in August, ran second to Pat McDonald in the three and second to Billy Duffy in the one-mile run. At the Short Hills Club's Summer games he won in the one-mile run in 4m. 55⅛s. Oct. 25, won a one-hour race at the Knickerbocker Club's games, defeating Gifford and many others, winning easily and covering 10 miles 1¼ laps on the Manhattan track, a best-on-record at that time. Dec. 6, at same club games at Madison-square Garden, won the one-hour run, defeating Christian, Gifford, McCaffrey and a host of other good men. He again made a best-on-record, doing 10 miles 2½ laps in the hour. In 1880 he joined the Brooklyn Athletic Club and was under Jack McMaster's care the whole season, it being the most successful season he had, winning all the races for which he started. June 5 he won the one-hour race at the Brooklyn Club's games, defeating Gifford and others and again making a best-on-record by running 10 miles 700 odd yards. The wind blew a gale during the entire race, and he was troubled with nose-bleed for over five miles. July 4, at the Williamsburg Club's games, won the one-hour race for the Maynard medal, doing 10 miles 220 yards; Gifford second. We next find him at the Montgomery Club's games, in Jersey City, defeating Gifford, Bailey, McCaffrey and other good ones in the five-mile run. At the games of the Brooklyn Club on Election-day "Billy" won the three-mile scratch-race easily. On May 30, 1881, he ran second to Gifford in the one-mile race at the N. Y. A. C. games. On June 4 he was defeated by Gifford in a five-mile race given by the Williamsburg Club. At Jack McMaster's benefit he won the ten-mile handicap and made a best-on-record, viz., 57m. 32s. He held the record for that distance over three years. At the N. Y. A. Club's Fall meeting he was defeated by W. C. Davis in the two-mile run by seven yards, both beating the record for that distance. Was again defeated by Davis at the championship games in the five-mile race, the last race he run. Some time ago he was proposed for membership in the N. Y. Caledonian Club, and we shall probably see his name appear this season at some of the sports.

SONS OF ST. GEORGE.

The annual games of the Sons of St. George of Philadelphia were held July 30, with the results shown below. Much dissatisfaction was expressed, and seemingly with good reason, with some of the decisions rendered, especially in the hurdle-race, which is stated to have been palpably wrong, and glaringly unjust to Sam Tiers:

SPORT AT SULZER'S.

Empire Council of the Benevolent Order of the Friends of Humanity held games at Sulzer's Harlem-river Park, this city, on Saturday afternoon, Aug. 4, when the following events were decided:

One-hundred-yards run—First heat: E. B. Turner, 6 yards start, first, in 11s.; S. E. Corbett, scratch, second, by a yard. Second heat: A. Fleischman, 6, first, in 11⅕s., winning easily; D. Jerman, 7, second. Third heat: J. Henery, scratch, first, in 10⅘s.; M. Hawell, 2, second, by two feet. Final heat: Turner first, in 10⅗s.; Hawell second, by two feet.

Tug-of-war—First pull: Le Boutillier Bros.' team beat Stern Bros.' team. Second pull: J. C. Brown's team beat Haas Bros.' team. Final pull: Le Boutillier Bros. beat Brown.

Five-mile run—Peter Golden, scratch, first, in 31m. 42s.; T. Collett, 60s., second, being easily beaten.

Unless there is a promise of better management and less disorder than prevailed on this occasion, it will be a difficult matter to induce anyone who respects himself to act in an official capacity when the Order next hold games.

BICYCLE-RACING IN FRANCE.

A series of bicycle-races, for valuable prizes offered by the municipality, took place at Toulouse, France, July 15, and were witnessed by about ten thousand persons. Results:

Championship of Toulouse (distance, 3,100 metres)—M. Patino, Toulouse, first; M. Bebely, Toulouse, 0; M. Projeau, 0. Patino led throughout and won by fifty yards.

International scratch-race (10 kilometres 400 metres)—Charles Terront, Paris, first; F. de Civry, Paris, second; H. O. Duncan, England, third; M. Esperon, Bordeaux, 0. This was the race of the day. At half-distance Terront rushed away and got a lead of thirty yards, which he increased a little each lap to the finish. When the bell rang for the last lap De Civry and Duncan left Esperon, and a neck-and-neck race ensued for the last turn, and De Civry gave way to Duncan, who got a lead of about ten yards; but De Civry put on a splendid "sprint," and, piling on the pace, won the second prize by a fine effort, beating Duncan by a length and a half; Esperon forty yards in the rear.

International tricycle scratch-race (5,560 metres)—F. de Civry, Paris, first; M. Projeau, Toulouse, second; M. Rousset, Bordeaux, third; Prince Soltykoff, Dax, 0; H. O. Duncan, England, 0. Won by fifty yards, Projeau getting second by twenty yards from Rousset.

International scratch-race—losers in the first race—(6,200 metres)—M. Bonnal, Montauban, first; M. Patino, Toulouse, second; M. Tessier, La Reole, third. Won by four yards; Patino sprinted Tessier on the post.

Anglo-French championship (3,100 metres)—Charles Terront, Paris, first; F. de Civry, Paris, †; H. O. Duncan, England, †. Several started for this event who had not a 20 to 1 chance, and at the fall of the flag Terront dashed off with the lead, De Civry going next, the latter receiving a warm reception from the crowd of spectators. Duncan followed close at the heels of De Civry and Terront, and a rare "dust up" ensued for premier position. Terront got a twenty yards' lead, which De Civry could never pick up, being out of all condition, and when the bell rang for the last lap a neck-and-neck struggle ensued between De Civry and Duncan, which resulted in a dead-heat, amidst intense excitement; others out of it.

H. W. GASKELL, Ranelagh Harriers, won the final heat of the four-miles invitation scratch race at the meeting of the Crichton Bicycle Club, Crystal Palace, London, Eng., July 19. He beat C. E. Liles by a short yard, in 11m. 34⅘s., being the best amateur time on record.

A TWELVE-HOUR go-as-you-please pedestrian contest was concluded at Wayne's Skating-rink, Johnstown, Pa., at 11 P. M. July 30: Score: Bittener, 55 miles 7 laps; Badger, 54 miles 19 laps; Harley, 53 miles 2 laps; Skinner, 51 miles 12 laps. Twenty-six laps made a mile.

P. F. RYAN defeated John E. Early in a one-hundred-yards foot-race, for fifty dollars, at Worcester, Mass., Aug. 2. Time, 12s.

AMATEUR FIFTY-MILE BICYCLE-RACE.

The fifth annual race for the fifty miles amateur bicycling championship of England came off July 21 at the Crystal Palace track, under the auspices of the National 'Cyclists' Union. Heavy rainfalls late in the morning rendered the track soft, and precluded the bettering of previous fast-time records. The Sporting Life says of it: "The disappointment was very great when it became known that neither last year's winner and record-maker at the distance—the Hon. I. K. Falconer—nor F. Sutton of the Edgbaston Harriers (of whom great things were expected) would be among the competitors, and in their absence the race was voted a good thing for the sturdy and youthful H. F. Wilson of the Surrey B. C., who, riding a wonderfully patient and well-judged race up to the half-distance, then made his effort, and, literally spreadeagling his field, pulled the prophets through by winning in fine style. The race, considering the soft state of the track and the strong, gusty wind which accompanied or opposed the 'cyclists, was run from first to last at a capital pace, Tacagni, Scott, Popplewell and McKinlay in turn going to the head of affairs in the first twenty-five miles, and taking the field along at a rare "bat;" but as soon as Wilson made a real effort, all this division were beaten, the only competitor who made a fight of it at all being F. R. Fry of Clifton; indeed, considering the marvelous turn of speed he exhibited in the last mile, there is every reason for supposing that, had he made his effort a couple of miles sooner, he would have seriously troubled the winner, who appeared to have had quite enough of it at the finish. He, however, won by two hundred yards, in 2h. 46m. 26⅘s.; Fry, 2h. 46m. 50⅕s.; H. R. Reynolds, 2h. 48m 16s.; C. D. Vesey, 2h. 57m. 48⅗s. Referee, G. L. Hillier; timekeeper, G. P. Coleman.

W. SNOOK of the Moseley Harriers was a three-time winner at the annual athletic meeting held at Widnes, Eng., July 21—the three-quarter-mile steeplechase (4m. ⅘s.), half-mile (2m. 15⅗s.) and one-mile (4m. 27⅗s.) flat races. In the last two events he defeated W. G. George, by a dozen yards and by fifteen yards respectively.

WHEELMEN'S RACES.—A series of amateur bicycle-races has been arranged to take place at Pleasure Park, Pittsfield, Mass., Aug. 15. The events consist of races at 100, 440 and 880 yards, two miles, five miles and twenty miles, a consolation-race and a fancy-riding contest. Entries (fee, one dollar, to be returned to starters) close Aug. 13, with L. L. Atwood, Pittsfield, Mass.

THE EAGLE BICYCLE CLUB was organized at Boston, Mass., Aug. 1, with the following officers: President, W. H. Bullard; vice-president, J. B. Foley; secretary and treasurer, J. H. Brown; captain, Albert Hosmer; first-lieutenant, Frank Stodder; second-lieutenant, J. V. McCarthy.

A NEW ATHLETIC CLUB has been organized at Bergen Point, N. J., with the following officers: President, John Goddard; vice-president, A. A. Smith; business-manager, Frederick Eldred; captain, E. Vredenburgh; committee—R. V. Schuyler, Frederick Moore and A. A. Smith.

REDSKINS RACING.—At Tolchester Beach, Md., on Aug. 1, a race of half-mile heats, best two in three, was run by the Indians encamped there. Thundercloud won in two straight heats, in 2m. 28s., 2m. 20s.; Black Hawk second and Black Wolf third.

J. S. PRINCE, H. W. Higham and Fred S. Rollinson, bicyclists, have formed a combination for the purpose of racing for purses and giving exhibitions at the Fall fairs throughout the country. They will also engage in races against trotting horses. They should prove a paying attraction.

H. D. COREY of the Massachusetts Bicycle Club on Aug. 1 made the descent of Mount Washington, N. H., on his machine, in the announced time of one hour and five minutes.

WONDERFUL TRICYCLE-RIDE BY A LADY.—Miss J. Choice of the South London (Eng.) Tricycle Club beat the twenty-four hours ladies' record by eleven miles on July 15, starting from the Elephant and Castle at twenty-three minutes to four A. M., riding via Red Hill and Crawley to Brighton. On reaching Crawley on the return journey she rode five miles out and back, covering the ten miles in 58m., and then, riding on through Red Hill, Merstham and Croydon, she reached home at twenty-eight minutes past twelve, having been twenty-one hours on the road; actual riding time for 113 miles, just over fifteen and a half hours. The ride was carefully timed and checked by Felix Church, Grey, A. T. Wilson, A. F. Thompson, Lacy Hillier, Mrs. and Mr. Smith, and Miss E. Choice, all of the South London T. C. Messrs. Thompson and Felix Choice went the whole distance with the exception of the ten miles out and home at Crawley. Roads generally heavy from the rain, and very bad through Croydon and Streatham. Several storms necessitated shelter en route.

AQUATIC.

HANLAN LOSES A WAGER.

On Aug. 2 John O'Brien, a lumberman of Stillwater, Minn., while watching the professionals at Lake Minnetonka launching their shells, remarked in Hanlan's hearing that he could paddle around in one of the racing boats with only one oar and without outriggers. Hanlan immediately offered to bet him $200 that he couldn't stand or sit in the boat used by Fred Plaisted, with outriggers off and without any fixtures or appliances for keeping the boat from turning, he to propel the boat with one of Plaisted's oars, for the space of one minute. O'Brien accepted the wager, and an agreement was drawn up in accordance with the terms proposed, each side staking fifty dollars in the hands of J. A. St. John as forfeit, the balance to go up an hour before the trial. It was also agreed that O'Brien be given 15 minutes from the time he first got in the boat to say he was ready, the entire minute to be occupied in open water. It was further agreed that O'Brien might put in any seat other than that previously used, provided it did not project beyond the boat. During the time the trial was being made the oar was not to touch the bottom or any platform or support. The trial took place on the lake between five and six o'clock on the afternoon of Aug. 4, O'Brien winning, as he managed the boat both sitting and standing. S. O'Brien was judge for O'Brien and J. A. St. John for Hanlan.

LEE RISES TO EXPLAIN.

We have received the following letter of explanation from George W. Lee in reference to the part he performed on the occasion of the race between Hanlan and Ross. Those who have thought well of Lee will be gratified to know that he disclaims any intention to act wrongfully at that time:

LAKE MINNETONKA, MINN., July 30, 1883.

EDITOR CLIPPER.—Dear Sir: Having read in your issue of the 28th inst. that the object of my presence on the course of the Hanlan-Ross race was open to grave suspicion, I wish to set the matter right by stating my reasons at once. I, like many others, supposed the race would be postponed, and after waiting a while went out in my shell, at Hanlan's request, to try the water. After going half a mile up the course I was returning to the boathouse, when, seeing the contestants coming out, I was obliged to give up my original plan of taking a position on the pressboat. Going up the course I waited at the turn until both had a long lead, and rowed down after them, coming in fully ten lengths behind Ross, who was a quarter of a mile behind Hanlan. Had I supposed that anyone would have taken me for Hanlan, and torn up pool-tickets at the resemblance, I most assuredly would have rowed at a different hour on that day. Yours respectfully, GEORGE W. LEE.

HULL YACHT CLUB.—The first of a series of three championship regattas was sailed by this club at Hull, Mass., Aug. 4. Wind and water were favorable, and the regatta was one of the most exciting ever held under the auspices of this organization. Results follow: Second-class centreboards, ten miles—B. Jenney Jr.'s Nimbo first, sailing time 1h. 50m. 48s.; corrected time 1h. 27m. 2s.; Fanchon second, 2h. 17m. 52s. and 1h. 47m. 7s. Second-class keel-sloops, ten miles—J. A. Osgood's Gem first, 2h. 18m. 10s. and 1h. 47m. 35s.; P. M. Bond's Lillie second, 2h. 18m. 15s. and 1h. 56m. 11s. Fourth-class, catboats, seven miles—W. L. Phinney's Queen Mab first, 1h. 11m. 14s. and 46m. 43s.; Amy second, 1h. 15m. 13s. and 49m. 43s. Fifth-class, catboats, seven miles—C. H. and R. C. Poor's Myrtle first, 1h. 27m. 13s. and 59m. 48s.; H. H. Faxon's Spray second, 1h. 28m. 17s. and 1h. 1m. 9s.

AMATEUR SWIMMING.—The annual race for the silver challenge cup and the long-distance amateur swimming championship of England took place on the Thames, over the usual course, from Putney bridge to Charing Cross railway bridge, July 21. Twenty-four started, and after one of the most exciting struggles ever witnessed on the river W. R. Itter, Torpedo Club, won, in 1h. 15m. 20s.; G. Bell second, by seventeen seconds; J. Hedges third. The distance swum was a little more than five miles. They swam with a strong tide.

THE FISHER CUP.—This trophy was sailed for by sloop and cutter yachts over a twenty-mile course at Chicago, Ill., Aug. 4. The entries were the Aileen of Toronto, the Atlanta of Bellville and the Wasp and Cora of the Chicago Yacht Club. The actual sailing-time was as follows: Wasp, 4h. 13m.; Cora, 4h. 7m.; Aileen, 4h. 14m.; Atlanta, 4h. 19m. As an allowance of ten minutes was made in favor of the Cora, she was declared the winner.

THE BECKWITHS, Willie and Miss Agnes, the famous swimmers, gave an exhibition at Saratoga Lake a few days ago, and from there proceeded to Toronto, Ont., arriving there Aug. 1. On the following day they performed before a large throng in the bay off Hanlan's Point and made a gratifying success. They were to give daily exhibitions at the same place during the ensuing week, making their headquarters at Hanlan's hotel.

THE CHICAGO YACHT CLUB attempted to sail their open regatta Aug. 3, three boats—Idler, Countess and Oriole—starting, but, owing to lack of wind, they were unable to complete the thirty-mile course in the prescribed seven hours, and therefore the race was declared off.

MATCH-RACE.—Wm. Oliver and Jas. Preston are matched to row one mile on the Harlem River Aug. 25, between and 6 P. M., for a prize valued at one hundred dollars.

GREENWOOD LAKE REGATTA.

The following circular has been sent out by the committee having this event in charge: The Greenwood Lake Association announce their third amateur regatta, on Greenwood Lake, Sept. 7, 8. All races will be one mile and a half straightaway, and will be rowed under the rowing rules of the National Association. All the boats in the race will start at one time. The course is a mile wide, and the sides of the Lake are a natural grandstand. The Regatta Committee will have the right in their discretion to arrange additional races. Regatta Committee, composed of one from each club making an entry, with the Committee of the Greenwood Lake Association, will name the referee, timekeeper, and judge at finish. This cup to be the absolute property of the winner, and open to all amateurs, subject to the rulings of the Regatta Committee. Arrangements have been made with all the hotels that the crews are to be boarded for $1 per day. Races open to all regularly organized amateur clubs. We define a junior sculler to be: One who has never been winner in a scull-race open to more than one club, nor pulled in such a race unless it was distinctly announced as a junior scull-race.

THE LATE CAPTAIN WEBB.

The inquest into the cause of the death of Capt. Matthew Webb was held at the office of Justice-of-the-peace Sheldon at Suspension Bridge, N. Y., on Tuesday, July 31, Coroner Elsheimer having empaneled the following jury: Morris A. Hager, A. W. R. Henning, F. W. Oliver, W. L. Lamont, Frank E. Johnson, Walter Horne, Chas. T. Hotchkiss and P. P. Burton. As nothing of moment was elicited further than was published in these columns last week, there is no need for us to give even the substance of the testimony. The verdict was that "Captain Matthew Webb came to his death while attempting to swim the whirlpool rapids of the Niagara River. The immediate cause of death the jury is unable to determine." It had been the intention to take the body to Hull, Mass., for interment, but decomposition had so far advanced that it was impossible to do so. Accordingly, the remains were temporarily buried in the quiet Oakfield Cemetery, a mile away from Suspension Bridge. Mrs. Madeleine Kate Webb, the widow, Fred. Kyle, two newspaper reporters and several strangers formed the little group who gathered about the grave and witnessed this sad interment of the great swimmer in a strange land. It is intended that the body shall be taken up in November and reinterred in the cemetery at Hull, Mass. The widow expresses her intention of making her future home in this country.

THE BAYONNE ROWING ASSOCIATION

held their annual regatta on the Kill von Kull, off Bayonne, N. J., on Saturday afternoon, Aug. 4. The weather was fine, water somewhat rough, and the distance pulled in every race less than one mile with a turn. Result as follows:

Single-scull gigs—W. Scofield, E. Nichols (coxswain) first, in 6m. 20s.; John Bull, H. W. Coffin (coxswain) second, by six lengths.

Four-oared barges—Viking Boat Club, W. Scofield (bow), J. Hoffman, F. P. Hoff, C. O. Stillman (stroke), H. W. Coffin (coxswain), first, in 5m.; Comet Boat Club, J. Stoddal (bow), J. Bull, J. Allaire, L. Whitehead (stroke), E. E. Van Buskirk (coxswain) second, by six furlongs.

Pair-oared gigs—M. A. Hyatt, L. M. F. Whitehead, J. E. Ellsworth Jr. (coxswain), first, in 5m. 12s.; F. F. Hoff, C. O. Stillman, E. E. Van Buskirk (coxswain), second, by half a length.

WON'T COME.—The four-oared crew of the Toronto Boat Club, who won the championship of the Canadian Association and were entered for the regatta of the National Association, cannot take part in the latter event in consequence of damage to their boat.

THE WAVERLY BOAT CLUB will hold their annual excursion and regatta at Alpine Grove, on the Hudson River, Aug. 21. Steamer and barges will leave foot of Forty-third street, N. R., at 8 A. M., Fifty-first street at 8:30 and Seventy-ninth street at 9.

THE Portland Yacht Club held a regatta for first and second class boats Aug. 2. The distance sailed was seventeen miles, and the winning boats, with their time, were as follow: Leila, sloop, 5h. 8m. 21s.; Ocrid, schooner, 4h. 25m. 51s.

To Correspondents.

J. C. BIRD, St. Louis.—The diagram you speak of was not inclosed. Possibly that is the reason we do not see that Black can draw from 1..K to B 4, in the Mason-Tchigorin diagram of July 7. Black 1..K to B 4, P to R 5; 2..P to R 3, P to Kt 5, K to Q 3—and, so far from Black's having the opposition White takes it; and whichever way Black goes White goes the other, and Queens first (?). As to P to Q R 4 losing for Black, there is some discrepancy in your moves where you change from ink to pencil. We copy exactly:

Black.	White.	Black.	White.
1..P to Q R 4	K to Q 4	3..P [Q P?] × P	P × P
2..K-Q 3	P-B 4	4..K-B 3	—and, surely, White

wins too easy for anything—but you see there is something wrong about this. If we've mistaken your meaning, forward diagram with your moves appended. Thanks for your interest, and we hope you will keep on examining, criticising if necessary, our end-game problems. Can we not secure some contributions from your powerful club, its list of officers, doings, etc.?

W. F. EDGAR, St. Paul.—Prob. 1,386 begins 1..R × P +; but we are soon to give a more finished version of the position.

CHAS. A. APPEL.—Thanks for continued attentions. The following will surely amuse and instruct you: Take our Problem No. 1,365, Feb. 17, '83. 1..Q to her 6; 2..Q to her 6; 3..Q to her 6; 4..Q to R 2—now, how has Black been compelled to answer these moves, giving mate to White on the 4th?

NOVELTIES.

A New American Opera.

"Virginia," a light opera composed by Dr. Joseph Parry, the principal of the Musical College of Wales, Swansea, and the libretto by Major Jones, American Consul at Newcastle-on-Tyne, was privately rehearsed July 12 in the Theatre Royal. It was thus reviewed:

The characters are: Soprano, Virginia (Edgar's love); contralto, Nell (Edgar's sister); tenors, Edgar (arrested as a deserter), Sergeant-major, Julius Cæsar (an old faithful negro servant), and Union Sergeant; baritones, Major Hamilton (Judge-advocate), Corporal Puffendorf (a German); bass, Colonel Longstreet (President), Captain Bragg (the villain), Politician, and Parson Brown (a chaplain). The first act opens in the Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, where the military guard is about to be relieved, and the soldiers join in the in-piring chorus "Home and the Counteraign—Love." Here it is declared, on the authority of Captain Bragg, that Sergeant Edgar has deserted the ranks. The choral incredulity of the guard in the "Is that so?" is very effective. A court-martial is immediately formed for the trial of the delinquent. The amorous Judge-advocate declares his disbelief in the charge against the hero, and takes occasion to sing a capital song—"My Southern Beauty." The nigger, Julius Cæsar, appears and informs the soldiers that he wants food for some ladies, Nell and Virginia, who have been left desolate while their natural protectors have joined the army. The court-martial sing a typical refrain. The swearing of the members of the court, in the refrain "We Swear," is most taking, and elicited deserved applause. The prisoner is brought in, and he manfully disdains to answer the base imputation cast upon him; but he is confronted by Captain Bragg and a sentry, who give evidence of his attempted flight. Edgar sings the sweet song "My Mountain Maid," and, being convicted, sings "A Virginian He'll Fall in His Own Native Vale." The ladies entering at this moment, there is an affecting scene between Nell and the Judge-advocate and Virginia and Edgar, who are lovers. The villian Bragg declares in an aside that Virginia shall be his, though he stoops as low as bearing false witness to win her, but the lovers blend their faith and their voices in a sorrowful yet triumphant duet. Act the second occurs in front of the War Department at Washington, where we see some Southern prisoners awaiting transportation. To them enter a chaplain and a politician, and a spirited discussion on religion and politics takes place, which the Union Sergeant comments upon in song. The ladies have been using their influence in Edgar's behalf, but Bragg proclaims that he will thwart them, and the hero shall be shot. Here we are let into a secret regarding the gallant Bragg, who has a trick of losing his voice whenever his company has to be led into action; and so he retires into safety, and leaves the work of fighting to others. The ladies are thwarted for a while in their efforts to gain the ear of the secretary, and Bragg, after his overtures to Virginia have been spurned, insinuates in a song, which is very sweetly set to music and was well rendered, that the culprit might yet be saved if she would become his wife. The next scene transports us into the interior of the War Department, where a bevy of fair damsels and a corresponding number of youths sit at their desks "quill-driving." The quills are immense, the activity most exemplary, and their running fire of criticism of the visitors is enjoyable, while the "Quill-driving Chorus" is a delightfully spirited number. The curtain does not fall on the second act until the ladies have obtained a passport from the secretary, and they sing a song descriptive of their going to the front. The third act takes places in the field in Virginia, where the Union troops are packing up for flight, while the distant sound of musketry betokens the approach of the enemy. Bragg comes to the front in a great hurry. He has had no time to lose his voice, and so finds himself in face of the alternatives—to run or to fight. The gallant troops clamor for him to lead them to the attack, but the coward falls back upon the old trick of hoarseness. This does not avail him now—he is found out—his sword is taken from him—and the prisoner Edgar, being released, is chosen leader of the troop. Here is sung a capital sword-song with a vociferous chorus. We wander off in another scene into company with the opposing guerrilla cavalry, and hear them discussing the merits of the war in a lively and unprincipled manner, peculiar to tricky politicians. Then we fall into company with Virginia and Nell, under the care of the nigger, taking their luncheon in the open air, while the receding reports of the musketry betoken the overthrow of the opposing force. In the dialogue between the fair ones they discover their mutual loves, though not until after the usual modest denial. This song and a duet, "I have watched the pensive eye," are truly charming. The sweet, soft dalliance of the maidens being over, in come the victorious army, under command of Edgar, singing a martial chorus. While they are still exultant the orderly comes in with the mails, distributes the letters, etc., and sings a capital "Letter-bag song." The words are a bagatelle, but the musical setting is intensely lively, and it was well sung. As the news circulates we hear that Edgar is wounded, though the day's triumph was due to his gallant exertions. The musical setting here is intricate, but effective. Such is the brief outline of the plot of the opera. We cannot say much for the poetry of the libretto, for rhymes here and there need adjusting, and its rhythm needs revising; but the spirit of it is unflagging. The situations it develops, if not very novel, are quite interesting, and it breathes the breath of Yankeeland. The characters are well imagined, distinct, and full of individuality, and their intermingling and juxta-positions are highly appropriate. As for the music with which Dr. Parry has fitted all these characters and interpreted the situations, it would not be fair to pronounce dogmatically after only one hearing of a hasty and imperfect rehearsal. But this we may safely say, that it is prima facie a pleasing and promising work. The musical form is full of variety. Melody follows melody in very happy succession, and these are ever and anon broken up into duets, trios, quartets, quintets, etc., echoed and re-echoed, and at length blended into the fullness of harmony. The composer has made the most of the slightest hints contained in the libretto, frequently expanding a phrase that seemed commonplace in the text into a tuneful and taking number: indeed, the level of the music is immeasurably above that of the literature. Detective ears, as they listen to the flow of melody, may conclude that memory as well as invention was present with the composer in his moments of inspiration; but detective ears, any more than detective constables, are not infallible.

"Three Hats,"

a farcical comedy in three acts, by Owen Dove and Alfred Maltby, which was originally produced in Bath, Eng., June 22, but not then reviewed, was produced in the Prince's Theatre, Manchester, July 16. The story is thus told:

The scene is laid throughout the three acts in one of the rooms of Mr. Pullett's house, and as the curtain rises on the first act the orchestra plays the tune of "All Round My Hat" by way of overture. Then Mr. Pullett is observed to enter—at a very early hour of the morning—in a very carefully quiet way, to take off his boots, and to go to his bedroom. A very similar manœuvre is gone through by another gentleman, who enters at about the same time on the other side of the room. Within a few minutes afterwards Mr. Pullett, unable to sleep, emerges again from his room, goes to the door of the other fellow's room, and, notwithstanding the other gentleman's indignant protests at being awakened so soon, he compels him to dress and to come out. Then, in the conversation which ensues, we get an opportunity of discovering the plot. The "other fellow," it appears, is Mr. Albert Orme, who, having once saved Mr. Pullett's life, has been adopted by the grateful rescued, and forced ever since to be Mr. Pullett's drudge and slave; for Mr. Pullett considers that in saving his life Gilbert Orme contracted a debt which he is bound to fulfill in making the saved life worth living. Being now in trouble, Mr. Pullett flies to Orme for counsel and assistance, and begins by explaining the circumstances of the case. It appears that Mrs. Pullett was away for the night with Miss Mabel, and Mr. Pullett, having taken advantage of the occasion by going to dine with his friends the Dashmores, was returning home rather late and rather "fresh," when he saw a young girl walking in the same direction as himself. To offer his escort seemed to him a natural and proper impulse, and he did so, with the result that he was allowed to take the young lady to supper at the Dilettante Club, after which he was returning quietly home when he somehow became involved in a street-row, during the progress of which his hat was knocked off, and he now finds that the one which he has brought home is not his own, but one bearing the name of Johnson on the crown of the lining. As his antagonist in the street-row had sworn to challenge him to a duel, and, as his own hat bore his name and address, Mr. Pullet is naturally afraid that the adversary will call upon him, and thus expose to his wife, who is now expected home at any minute, the secret of his late "outing" of the previous night. In this emergency, as already stated, Mr. Pullett calls upon Gilbert Orme, and promises to give that gentleman the hand of his daughter if he will look through the "London Directory," and call with an apology upon every Johnson whose name is therein included. Gilbert protests, but it is in vain, and he is pushed out of the room with the "Directory" just as Mrs. Pullett and Mabel enter. The ladies are about to acquaint Mr. Pullett with the fact that a suitor has been found for Mabel's hand, when an interruption takes place, and the explanation is delayed. Within a short time a gentleman calls "about a hat," and Mr. Pullett, fearing lest this should be his antagonist of the previous night, endeavors to get rid of him before his wife can see him; but, Mrs. Pullett entering, mistake number one occurs by her being made to recognize in him one Oscar Johnson, a poet, whose works she has recently read. This mistak provokes some laughter, which is increased when Mr. St. Germains, the agreeable author of a "work on caligraphy, or the art of mastering writing without the aid of a master," is mistaken by Pullett for the bloodthirsty antagonist of the previous night, and dismissed with many profuse apologies, and an assurance that his hat has already been sent home. Gilbert Orme now returns, and states that he has been unable to discover the "Johnson" to whom the hat is supposed to belong. We now learn incidentally that Gilbert Orme is secretly married, and some letters which come to the house for him from his wife are appropriated by Pullett, who thinks they must be meant for him, since he gave his friend's name instead of his own to his lady acquaintance of the previous night, and who is much astonished to find that the writer claims him as her own, and as tied to her by indissoluble bonds. In the next act fresh complications arise from the fact that Hector Chablis, the suitor to the hand of Pullett's daughter, having come to make a formal proposal to Mr. Pullett, meets Mr. St. Germains, the gentleman who "called about the hat" in the first act, and who has returned for further explanations, as his hat has not yet reached his house. Chablis, mistaking Mr. St. Germains for Mr. Pullett, proposes to the former for the hand of his daughter, and is enthusiastically accepted in a very funny scene. The daughter of Mr. St. Germains, it is subsequently shown, is the lady whom Gilbert Orme has secretly married, and more amusing complications are made to spring from this fact, the result being that eventually everything appears to be in a hopelessly entangled condition, when the authors adroitly explain everything by showing how Mr. Pullett had lost his hat before he left the house of the Dashmores, Mr. St. Germains, who was also a visitor there, having taken it. The hat which Mr. Pullett lost in the street row was, therefore, that of Mr. St. Germains, while that which he picked up instead proves to have been that of his proposed son-in-law, Hector Chablis, whose hatter's name—"Johnson"—has been the cause of all the confusion. By giving his consent to his daughter's marriage to Hector Mr. Pullett succeeds in disarming the latter's anger as to the occurrences of the previous night. Mr. St. Germains is, of course, bound to accept Gilbert Orme as his son-in-law since his daughter is already married to him, and thus the piece ends happily. In this brief summary of the plot we have, of course, given nothing like a complete account of the almost endless complications with which the piece abounds, and we must admit that we should experience some difficulty in describing them all. But, while these intricate misunderstandings are so exceedingly numerous, they do not appear to hamper the plot when the piece is being played, but, rather the contrary, all serve to heighten the ridiculous fun of this "farce of errors."

"La Regina di Scozia"

(The Queen of Scots), an Italian opera in three acts, by Mrs. F. M. Stuart Stresa, was produced in the Folies Dramatiques Theatre, London, July 14. The audience was small. "The entire libretto displays only a weak method of handling dramatic incidents, and the composer cannot be credited with the slightest originality. She has evidently studied the principal works of Donizetti. In fact, the entire work is Donizetti diluted, and greatly diluted, and in some passages there are hints of Weber and even a few echoes of Wagner."

"A Willing Slave,"

a tragedy-comedy in three acts, by Mark Melford, was produced in the Theatre Royal, Bristol, July 15. It is an Irish play, but did not make a marked success.

IN LONDON, ENG.

AMERICAN PERFORMERS.—"A Dream, or Bink's Photograph-gallery," was produced at the Avenue Theatre, under the management of M. B. Leavitt, July 16. The Era says:

The burden of the representation fell upon Mr. Edouin, Miss Alice Atherton and James T. Powers. Mr. Edouin's drollery as the impecunious photographer, manufacturing cuffs and collar and clean shirt from a sheet of paper in order the better to lay siege to the heart of Ruby Chillington and to cut out the "dude," was irresistible, and was quite worthy the actor who had played Hamlet "for one consecutive night" at the Theatre Royal, Croydon. As the old man of the first act, too, he played with much humor and caused much merriment. Miss Alice Atherton exhibited great versatility, singing, dancing and whistling her way into general favor. Her make-up as the old lady of the first act was very effective, and the spectators applauded lustily when they found the venerable couple engaged in a dancing contest for a trifling wager. What, however, are most likely to be talked about are Miss Atherton's frame-pictures in the second act, in which, by the aid of the art of making-up, she uses her own pretty face to give us very admirable portraitures of Henry Irving, Miss Eastlake, the Prince of Wales and Joseph Jefferson in his great impersonation of Rip Van Winkle. The last-named, showing Rip, with his long, white hair and flowing beard, after his strange and protracted sleep, was really splendid in its realism, and called forth a hearty round of applause. Mr. Powers is an artist of much skill and of varied ability, vocal, saltatory, acrobatic, and pantomimic. As the Bob Bibbity of the first act, equal to the consumption of any number of tarts, and as the Chip-Cheeky, who would rather leap over a chair or house than walk around them in the second, he was full of activity and full of fun, and of the honors bestowed a large share very properly fell to him. Richard Golden as the sour-visaged Thomas of the first act, and as the dude or masher Augustus of the second, also merits special commendation for some excellent work. Miss Victoria Reynolds made a pretty and vivacious Kitty Binks, joining Mr. Powers in a capital rendering of a duet called "The Family Overhead." The best vocal contributions, however, were made by Miss Dora Wiley, who, first as Grace Binks, second wife to Mr. Thomas, and secondly as Polly, the "empress of the broom," gave evidence of much skill as a singer, a sweet contralto voice being used with much effect and expression in a vocal waltz by Tito Mattei, and in the old Scotch ballad "Annie Laurie."

LILLIAN RUSSELL and W. H. Hamilton made their English debut at the Gaiety Theatre in "Virginia and Paul," first sung in London July 16. The Era says:

The opera-bouffe introduced some artists new to the London stage, and of these we can give no little praise to Mr. Hamilton, who represented the sorcerer. Mr. Hamilton has a rich baritone voice, which he employs with considerable facility, and he acts with ease and freedom. In a kind of mock scena in the second act he was greatly applauded, and his share in a duet with Virginia also deserved great praise. It was neatly executed, and helped to secure the hearty encore given. Mr. Hamilton is a decided acquisition in a work of this kind. William Elton, who made his first appearance since his return from America, was comical as the chief of the "navvies," and his song-and-dance gained hearty applause. The heroine was sustained by a lady new to London. This was Miss Lillian Russell, who has many personal attractions to recommend her, and who also acts with much grace, combined with the requisite humor. Her scenes in the second act as the Professional Beauty were among the chief elements of interest in the opera, the satire upon some of the ladies who have made themselves notorious being received with great merriment. Miss Russell has a sweet and pure voice, and sings with much fluency. One of her songs, "The Silver Line," a waltz-melody, was encored. Miss Russell sang it charmingly, as she did all the music of the opera, and her vocal skill, combined with her attractive appearance and graceful acting, made a distinctly favorable impression, and justifies us in speaking of her as the most fascinating comic-opera artist we have had from America for years.

SCINTILLATIONS.

ELEANOR CALHOUN is playing Mrs. Bancroft's part in "Fedora" at the Haymarket, London, while Mrs. B. is resting in Hamburg.

RATHER BROAD.—On the stage the question of divorce is rarely brought before an audience so pointedly as in the new opera-bouffe "Virginia and Paul," produced at the Gaiety. When the Sorcerer, like Mephistopheles in "Faust," shows a "society lady" in a vision, the gazer remarks that she has a wedding-ring on her finger. The Sorcerer then responds: "She has been divorced three times, and may now be hired for the season!"

LUCILLE MEREDITH, a young American lady who is said to have a fine soprano voice, and who was, says The Era, the original Virginia in "Virginia and Paul" when it was produced in New York last year, is in London, and, like Miss Russell, intends settling there to pursue her profession. [Miss Lucy L. Couch was the original Virginia in this city.—ED. CLIPPER.]

BERNHARDT, after playing nine times in the Gayety Theatre, London, during the week ending July 21, played in "Valerie," Scribe's three-act play, at the New Club on Sunday morning—for it was long past midnight when the curtain rose—left at 8 A. M. for Boulogne, France, where she played that night, and traveled from there to Havre, where she acted Monday night.

CHARLES V. SEAMAN, an American performer with Moore & Burgess' Minstrels, sailed for this country July 25.

"CONFUSION," which was originally played in the Vaudeville Theatre, London, at a matinee May 17, was produced there July 16 as a nightly attraction.

FRED EVANS, pantomimist, has recently met with heavy losses through Continental engagements.

J. CHEVERS was at Day's Concert Hall, Birmingham, at our last advices; Andy and Annie Hughes and Petrie and Fish were in Manchester.

ACCIDENT.—While Lero and his brother were performing on the trapeze at Olney's Circus, Oldham, a rope broke, and they fell a considerable distance. Lero was taken to a hospital.

THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA closed its season in London July 21.

MINNIE PALMER began a week's season in Nottingham July 23.

THEODORE HAMILTON is advertised to make a tour of Great Britain, playing in "Unknown."

CHARLES HARRIS is again stage-manager of the Adelphi, London.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ QUESTIONS THAT DO NOT REACH THIS OFFICE UNTIL TUESDAY MORNING WILL NOT BE ANSWERED UNTIL THE FOLLOWING WEEK.

H. H., Athens.—Your scheme is utterly impracticable unless you have a number of artistically constructed lay figures and a number of theatrical costumes. The greenroom is easily enough managed. It should represent a room devoid of furniture, having a carpet of a neutral tint, the walls colored green, and benches covered with green material attached to the walls on all sides. It may be lighted by a chandelier suspended from its centre, and should contain one or more large mirrors reaching from the floor upwards sufficiently high to show the entire figures of the artists. These mirrors should have at their sides bracket gaslights. For Tragedy attire a lay figure as Othello; Burlesque, a female figure in typical burlesque costume; Opera, a figure as Norma; Comedy, Lady Teazle; Pantomime, Clown and Pantaloon; Drama, Lucretia Borgia; Minstrelsy, an endman. To properly costume these or similar characters would cost a deal of money.

SHAKESPEARE, Denver.—The play of "Francesca da Rimini" is not in print. It was brought out about thirty years ago by the late E. L. Davenport, and was but sparingly played. It has lately been rewritten for Lawrence Barrett, who alone has the right to play it. It is possible that there have been copies printed for private use; and, if so, you might, under the peculiar circumstances attaching to your case, procure one by writing either to its author, the Hon. George H. Boker of Philadelphia, or to Lawrence Barrett. The latter will be in this city towards the close of this month.

C. G., Boston.—1. The members of the company at the Brooklyn Theatre at the opening of the season of 1872-3 were Messrs. Roche, Lennox, Chippendale, Kennedy, McDonnell, Brutone, Reibert, Loudon, Graig, Wynne, Wright, Stevens and Connor, with E. F. Taylor as stage-manager; the Misses Reeves, Burke, Brevoort, Benedict, Conway (Minnie), Gray, Parker and Campbell, and Mrs. Farren and Mrs. Brutone. 2. We have no back numbers for any period anything like so remote.

T. A. H., Baltimore.—1. Advertise in our business columns for such a position, stating your qualifications. 2. You do not necessarily need to be familiar with scores of operas, to begin with. Familiarity with the repertory of a troupe would come through your participating in the rehearsals of that troupe, especially if you were engaged at the outset of the season, which is the likeliest time for you to get an engagement such as you desire.

DAD, Stuyvesant.—1. See answers in another column. 2. Robert McWade is still playing. 3. We do not in this column give whereabouts. Watch our amusement-news pages from week to week for movements of players. 4. There might have been several of that name heard of by us and forgotten. There have been thousands of bone-players.

W. G., Pittsburg.—If you will state why you ask, so as possibly to give us a guide, we shall make a search. We do not make a note of the first production of songs. Indeed, with respect to the music, it would be extremely hazardous to assert positively of many a song put forth as "new and original" when the music of it was first heard, whatever might be said of the words.

INQUIRING ORVILLE.—1. Otis Skinner has been on the stage five or six years. 2. As to how old he is, whether he is married or single, etc., you had better write him. There is no one else so well qualified to give you a reliable answer. We have sound reasons for not desiring to encourage questions as to the private affairs of professionals.

SIGNATURE UNDECIPHERABLE.—It is quite possible. Turning a double-somersault from another's shoulders has been accomplished by a number of performers. It has been done by the Garnellias in the Olympic Theatre, this city. We do not know whether the Carlo Brothers have done it there or not.

H. G. T., Houston.—Your violin, if in good order, would be more likely to bring its price among wealthy amateurs than among professional people. Geo. Gemunder, Astoria, or H. Sontag, Park place, N. Y., might put a price on it, and we would suggest advertising it as for sale.

V. H., Pueblo.—In this column we do not give whereabouts of troupes or routes ahead. Such information we publish in our amusement-news columns from week to week, according as it comes to hand or is purposely withheld by managers for their own private purposes.

D. J. D.—James O'Neil was not the original Pierre in "The Two Orphans" at the Union-square Theatre. He did not appear at that house until several years after that play had been withdrawn from its boards.

C. C.—1. Call at our office and examine the files. Reference may have been made to some of the performers. 2. It is not likely that any newspaper would publish the cast at a house like that, unless the play were one never before performed.

C. S., Albion.—The best way for you to do would be to advertise for them in our business columns. You would be likely to get better terms in that way, as oftentimes there are retired showmen looking for a chance to find someone else to feed their animals.

T. H. G., Fordham.—1. Thomas Baker has not been leader of orchestra at Wallack's Theatre for a season or so. 2. There has been but one Mme. Ponisi on the American stage, and she is before the public yet.

AJAX, Washington.—Go to a crockery store and buy ordinary glasses. The quantity of water in every one regulates its tone. There is no occasion for glasses to be specially made for the business.

V. A.—Endeavor to get an audience with some manager in your city, although it is rather late to think of getting an engagement now, as companies are nearly all filled. Nothing but personal influence can be of any service to you.

J. E. C., East Albany.—We do not furnish addresses. You can write the party in care of THE CLIPPER Post-office, and we shall gratuitously advertise that we have the letter. He can then send for it.

F. H. A., Pierre.—Advertise in our business columns for people.

J. W. H., Fort Grant.—It is probably the name of the play. There is a drama called "Claude Duval." "Claude" is not properly a woman's name, and we know of no performer named Claude Duval.

T. J. L., Newnan.—It means a darky. By the "musical mokes" advertised for were meant white persons who, appearing in black face, perform on musical instruments.

PUCK, Warren.—You can find out by writing to Annie Pixley. But it strikes us that the best place to ascertain whether she ever played "Miss" in Warren, Pa., is just where you are.

BROOKLYN.—1. See answer to "J. E. C., East Albany." 2. By watching our circus columns from week to week you are likely to see recorded therein the movements of troupes.

S. S. S.—"The Mulligan-guard Ball" was one of the earliest of "The Mulligan Guard" series of sketches. It was played at the old Theatre Comique during the season of 1878-9.

MCK., Trenton.—Jaques Offenbach visited this country. His first appearance here in public was on May 11, 1876, at Gilmore's Garden, this city.

J. D., Pittsburg.—1. We do not furnish addresses. 2. The party who was joint author of that play has died since we first answered you.

T. B., Chicago.—It has been said recently that Lydia Thompson is coming to this country again; but there has been no announcement to that effect which we deem authoritative.

NO SIGNATURE.—The original "Big Four" were not Pettingill, Gale, Daly and Hoey. No one of them was ever in the "Big Four." They were the original "American Four."

F. W. B., Rochester.—Charlotte Cushman's last farewell to the stage took place at the Globe Theatre, Boston, May 15, 1875.

C. G., Allegheny.—1. We do not in this column furnish either addresses or routes ahead. 2. See reply to "Brooklyn."

S. W., Philadelphia.—William Harris opened the Howard Athenæum under his own complete management on May 3, 1880.

L. H. C., Indianapolis.—Joe Pentland the clown died on Feb. 7, 1873.

NINTH WARD.—1. Dan Bryant died in 1875. 2. About 1855.

NAT.—See reply to "J. E. C., East Albany."

G. W. M.—We do not furnish addresses.

B. M., Corry.—Address Goodyear Rubber Co., this city.

A. D., Ottawa.—See answer to "Brooklyn."

K. G., New Orleans.—See reply to "J. E. C., East Albany."

D. T. M., Norfolk.—William Rufus Blake died in Boston, Mass.

J. S., Chicago.—See answer to "J. E. C., East Albany."

INTRODUCTORY.

TUESDAY, Aug. 7.

The Summer season now drawing to a close has not been productive of lasting successes. "The Thunderbolt," produced here, and "The Power of Money" and "The Americans," brought out in Chicago, were the most pretentious works. All three proved failures. "The Rajah" is a simulation of success, but only because of the forcing process peculiar to that theatre which keeps plays running here at a loss in order that its traveling companies can "play" them on out-of-town audiences attracted by the implication of great merit contained in the announced fact that this or that piece has been performed for so many successive nights in New York. There are "runs," and then, again, there are "runs." There are very few of the former—there are too many of the latter. When every play that a theatre brings out has a "run," the odor of humbug should be so strong that nobody can mistake it for the scent of genuineness.....Foremost in ushering in the regular season in this vicinity is the Theatre Comique, whose enterprising managers begin this year as early as Aug. 6, with a revival of "The Mulligan-guard Ball," one of their old-time successes. This leads to a pertinent conundrum, which we hope Messrs. Harrigan & Hart will not deem impertinent as well:

Ned Harrigan's clever—that ev'ryone says—
And by merit has gathered in pelf;
But when he reverts to his Mulligan plays,
Isn't that "going back on" himself?

The charm of this will have been entirely lost if the reader fails to detect the delicate relationship between the verb in the third line and the quoted phrase in the fourth.....There is a report that Mapleson and Abbey are going to harmonize in London by jointly taking a lease of the new opera-house so long due on the Thames Embankment. Even if it be true that they are going to be lion and lamb together over there, that is no reason why they should be else than cat and dog over here, each striving to gobble up the bone, who will be Strakosch. In this fight the longest wind should prevail.

OPERATIC DISCORD.

What with Mapleson, Abbey and Strakosch, we see,
We'll have much op'ra, but not much harmony.
They'll give us music of a martial class,
And he'll survive who shows the heaviest brass.

.....Osmund Tearle and Minnie Conway have gone housekeeping together in great haste. Last week, when racket.....The Mail and Express does not live up to its name. It is not an express "by a large majority," and is even much slower than the mail. Last Friday it told its readers that "the poor old Lyceum which once bore Brougham's name is about to lose Haverly's and assume Colville's." The house has not in years been known as anybody's Lyceum, having been re-christened Haverly's Fourteenth-street Theatre. It was never Brougham's Lyceum. That famous but short-lived house of thirty odd years ago, afterwards the first "Wallack's Theatre," was a mile farther down town, and on Broadway. It passed out of existence as Barney Williams' Broadway Theatre just at about the period that the Theatre Francais in Fourteenth street had its name changed to the Lyceum. Brougham was manager of three theatres here, and was unfortunate in all of them; but he must rest easier in his grave for knowing that he never had anything to do with any Fourteenth-street house but the Academy of Music as a "snap."

.....A tourist who put up at a Florida hotel the other night began looking in his bed for something else and found thirty-one thousand dollars hidden in the mattress. The last previous occupant of the room was an actor who had been hurriedly summoned to Chicago for rehearsal. The money, it is to be inferred, was the profits of his last season, when he had traveled as a "star." Wrong! The actor, unlike the tourist, had neglected to investigate the mattress.

CITY SUMMARY.

THE THEATRE COMIQUE ushered in its regular season on the night of Aug. 6. There was a fine audience as to quality, and the quantity was such that before eight o'clock the announcement was made that there was standing-room only. The bill was "The Mulligan-guard Ball," which is a revival of one of the most popular of the plays brought out by Messrs. Harrigan & Hart at their old Theatre Comique. It has been amplified by the interpolation of new points of the humorous sort, and here and there it has been enlivened by the introduction of quaint sayings that are now current, in place of some that have lost their meaning. The characters are the same as of old. George Wood and Miss Jennie Christie, who now make their first appearances at this theatre, are playing the roles of Chaplain Puter and Mrs. Lochmuller, respectively made familiar years ago by the late Billy Gray and Miss Annie Mack. Mr. Wood and Miss Christie both acquitted themselves satisfactorily, and are likely to become favorites at the Comique. The lady has been well known in connection with metropolitan theatres for many years, as also has her husband, Christie Miller, who also now join this company, appearing for the present in the minor part of Mr. Ceiling. Quilter and Goldrich are now both on the staff of the Comique, the latter having made his first bow here last Monday night as Gabe Go-off. Mrs. Annie Yeamans, after a season's absence, returns in the role of Mrs. Mulligan, and Miss Gertie Granville, absent for nearly a season, but now evidently gaining the mastery over an ailment that at one time was regarded as incurable, reappears, her assignment being the role of Kitty Lochmuller. The first of the old favorites to come on the stage on the opening night was Johnny Queen, who was of course accorded a cordial greeting. Next came Annie Yeamans, whose reception was extremely enthusiastic, and involved the giving-up of a basket of flowers and four bouquets on the part of admirers of hers. These were the only floral tributes of the night, and Mrs. Yeamans may therefore be regarded as having been the "lion" of the opening. Harrigan, Hart, Harry Fisher, Gertie Granville and John Wild were severally received with warmth; and with these prompt manifestations of goodwill on the part of the spectators the success of the revival was assured. The music, with one exception, comprises old and popular numbers—"The Little Widow Dunn," "Down in Gossip Row," "The Skidmore Fancy Ball," "The Pitcher of Beer," and "The Babies on Our Block." The exception is "We're all Young Fellows, Brand-new," sung by Tony Hart and his band of "Young Mulligans," and which David Braham, leader of the orchestra, had the satisfaction of seeing well received. The Tuesday and Friday matinees that have for so long a time been a peculiar feature at the Comique are to be continued. As showing the strength of the present company, we append a list of their names: Messrs. Edward Harrigan, Tony Hart, John Wild, Geo. Wood, James Fox, Harry A. Fisher, John Queen, M. Bradley, P. C. Goldrich, Richard Quilter, Wm. West, Joseph Sparks, James Barlow, Christie Miller John Sparks, M. Foley, Geo. Merritt, Geo. L. Stout, James Fitzsimmons, Thomas Granger, Chas. Coffey, Wm. Merritt, J. McCullough, Emil Heusel, Wm. A. Barlow and J. Ward; Mrs. Annie Yeamans; and the Misses Gertie Granville, Jennie Christie, Ada Farwell, Lizzie Finn, Sadie Morris, Annie Langdon, Kate Langdon, Annie Hall.

L. J. VINCENT is to be the stage-manager of the Twenty-third-street Theatre.

F. MCCULLOCH ROSS, juvenile-actor, arrived from England during the past week.

W. J. FERGUSON is to begin his starring season at the Twenty-third-street Theatre Sept. 3, for two weeks, as the Dude Sir Chauncy Trip in "A Friendly Tip."

MARRIED.—Samuel Colville and Emeline Rosenquest were united in marriage in the Green-street Methodist Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, Pa., at 11 A. M. Aug. 2, by the Rev. Madison A. Richards. John T. Donnelly, manager of Carncross' Minstrels, and a daughter of the officiating clergyman were the only witnesses. The bride is a Brooklyn lady, known in private life as Mrs. Emeline Reed, who went abroad to study for the operatic stage. Of late years she had traveled with Mr. Colville's Folly Co. as one of the chief features, playing under the name of Eme Roseau.

A NEW ENTRANCE from Broadway to the Fifth-avenue Theatre is being constructed, the store numbered 1,187 being utilized.

THE BIJOU THEATRE has been leveled to the earth, and the work of building a new theatre on its site is rapidly progressing.

W. J. CHAPPELLE arrived Aug. 1. He goes again as advance-agent with Leavitt's Gigantean Minstrels next season.

AN EVENING CONCERT AND FESTIVAL will take place at the Madison-square Garden Aug. 8, the proceeds to go to the benefit of the Brotherhood of Telegraphers. Geo. Loesch will be the musical-director. An orchestra of 150 pieces is promised, and a number of German singing societies will take part.

SEPARATED.—F. C. Bangs and Mrs. Alice Singer Lagrove, who were married only a few weeks ago in Brooklyn, it is said, have parted. A telegram from Philadelphia dated Aug. 6 says: "Mr. Bangs has separated from his wife, and she has promptly entered suit in the Court of Common Pleas of this city to recover from him $7,000, all-ged to have been advanced to him prior to the marriage, with which to pay debts incurred during an unfortunate starring tour. The suit is brought here that an attachment might issue upon the household furniture of his sister, Mrs. Cassandra V. Johnston, a Southern lady, at whose house their Philadelphia reception was given. * * * The quarrels culminated in Mr. Bangs leaving the house, coming to this city for a few days, and then returning to the Sturtevant House in New York. * * * It is alleged that she is determined upon a second divorce."

DR. HAMILTON GRIFFIN and family sailed in the Arizona Aug. 7 to join Mary Anderson in London, Eng.

ABE LEAVITT returned from England Aug. 6.

AT HARRY MINER'S BOWERY THEATRE business continues good, and Manager Miner endeavors to keep it at that mark by giving his patrons plenty for their money. The lengthy programme this week includes the following names: Prof. Singer, who in his musical specialty singly represents a small orchestra; Alice Keating and John Lord, song-and-dance and jig-artists; Joe and Annie Burgess in their sketch of "A Good Woman;" the Big and Little Wesleys; Ada Burnett, vocalist, who made quite a hit in "Just My Size;" the Jackleys in their acrobatic specialties; the Big Little Four—Buckley, Kelly and the Callen Bros.—in their songs and sayings; Thomas and Clara Maxwell, vocalists and sketch-artists; the De Bar Bros., contortionists; George Kaine, Dutch and Hebrew comedian; the Four Diamonds—Watson, Gilmore, Brevarde and Sawtelle—in their songs, dances, etc.; and Joe Burgess and the company in a laughable sketch entitled "The Strikers."

N. S. WOOD in "Jack Harkaway Afloat and Ashore" is the special attraction at the National Theatre this week, and the drama is full enough of sensations to please even Manager Heumann's patrons, who have a particular liking for strongly dramatic situations. The star, too, is popular with East-siders; so, as was to be expected, a large audience was present on the opening night, Aug. 6. The variety entertainment, preceding the drama, was furnished by Mlle. Desiree, the popular operatic vocalist, who makes her first appearance in New York after quite a lengthy absence; the Bernardos, jugglers and balancers; Max Arnold, German comedian; and the Four Planets—Kennedy, Sheehan, Thomas and Heeney—in their Ethiopian songs-and-dances.

THE NEW PEOPLE at the London Theatre this week are Sullivan and Cronin, who are first on the programme in the sketch of "McCormack the Copper;" Annie Hart, who supplements her other vocal efforts with an imitation of Maggie Cline; John B. Wills and May Adams in their songs, dances, etc.; the Four Comets—Hawley, Manning and Tommy and Bobby Williams—in "Fragments;" J. H. Conroy and J. L. Dempsey, character artists and vocalists; Shaffer and Blakely in their Ethiopian sketch of "Our Wedding-day;" the Four Shamrocks, who continue to bill their "Workingman's Strike" as "the best Irish act on earth;" and Frank Lewis, motto-vocalist. The entertainment concludes with the company in the piece of "Oscar in Hard Luck." There was a good-sized audience present on Monday night.

MME. PAPPENHEIM, it is said, is to revisit us this Fall as a member of the Mapleson Opera Co.

ACCIDENT.—Miss St. George Hussey, while passing under the elevated railroad on Third avenue, felt a substance which fell from above enter her eye. The pain becoming severe, a physician was called, and he extracted a small chip of steel. The following morning, after another operation, another particle of steel was removed. She expects to be able to resume her professional duties in about a week.

HAVERLY'S THEATRE, as it will continue to be called under the proprietorship and management of Sam'l Colville, is to be opened Saturday, Aug. 18, for a preliminary season. The attraction will be Gilmore & Gallagher's "Devil's Auction" Co.

ARRIVED from Europe in the City of Berlin Aug. 5: Mr. and Mrs. Frank Weston (Effie Elsler), Mr. and Mrs. M. S. Rich, Mrs. John Howson and son, Leonard F. Tracey, Charles V. Seamon and Henry Lee.

DRAMATIC.

A NEW PLAY.—"An American Marriage," a new society play in four acts, by Celia Logan, was produced for the first time on any stage at the Sans-souci Garden, Providence, R. I., Aug. 6. It was cast thus: Baron D'Esmonde, Frederic De Belleville; Marquis De Tangay, George R. Parks; Dr. Brinden, Harry Allen; Count Wilsted, Frank Norcross; Jenkins, Phineas Leach; Muriel Chantrey, Miss Sadie A. Cole; Marquise Clarisse De Tangay, Miss Celia Logan; Lucette, Miss Helen Jennings; Elsie, Miss Elly Pferdner; Vivienne, Little Dollie Tweed. The plot, as summarized upon the housebill, hinges upon the subject well-worn in real life, but not hitherto dealt with upon the stage, viz., of an American girl marrying a needy foreigner. Dazzled by his title, she accepts his offer and places her fortune at his disposal. This he soon dissipates, and then absconds, abandoning her to want, and marries again without a divorce. She, by a series of dramatic incidents, meets him in Brussels at the house of the lady who supposes herself to be his wife, he having thought that an American marriage was a tie that might be sundered at will, without any legal formalities. Our correspondent says: "The piece is conventional and commonplace, and is without character or originality. There is no further merit to its dialogue than that its language is grammatical. Its plot is without variety or color. Miss Sadie Cole, for whom the play was written, is hardly qualified by talent and experience to play the part. She has a thin voice, and at times her gestures were faulty. The male support, headed by Mr. De Belleville, was good, and the audience was moderately appreciative."

W. J. FLORENCE and John McCullough are still at Long Beach.

W. G. DAVIS, who has been managing the Zoo, Toronto, Ont., during the Summer, rejoins Joseph Murphy Sept. 1 as manager.

FLORENCE STRATTON MARTIN, emotional actress, supported by the Boston Standard Comedy Company, will shortly start out on a traveling tour. A number of people are wanted for the company; also an agent. See card.

The appended press-notices show, too, that the performances given are worthy of this liberal patronage. Frank Hartell joined the circus in Salem 3. The route of the show is Webster, Mass., Aug. 9, Putnam, Ct., 10, New Britain 11, Danbury 13, Waterbury 14, Winsted 15, Derby 16, Bridgeport 17, Stamford 18, Long Branch, N. J., 20.

THE INTEROCEAN—JOHN B. DORIS' GREAT SHOW IN LAWRENCE.—Barnum's last season's venture was voted first-class by all who saw it. Forepaugh's efforts this year were well approved; but in the estimation of the witnesses of yesterday's show John B Doris has overtopped them all. Without pretensions to the enormous spread of canvas or host of performers of his rivals, Mr. Doris has aimed to give a thoroughly enjoyable performance with the best talent obtainable, and has hit his mark fairly and squarely. In spite of the advertising advantages of a "three-ring circus," every attendant of the show last evening must have felt the relief from the frantic efforts needed at Forepaugh and Barnum's to make himself cross-eyed in watching three rings at once. It was a genuine old-fashioned circus, with the best of performers and no objectionable features. The overture by the Interocean Royal Military Band, under the leadership of Prof. Harry Armstrong, was enjoyable music—which is much more than can generally be said of the work of circus bands. Satsuma, the inimitable "Jap," had the first number on the programme, and his performance was almost beyond comment. The applause which greeted him sufficiently testified the appreciation of the audience. The Rice Brothers, gymnasts, did a good act and were pleasantly received. Millie Christine and Christine Millie, the two—no, the one young lady, who is the fortunate possessor of two heads and four feet—was next introduced, and entertained them with singing and dancing. This wonderful freak of nature is well worth seeing, and makes an entire exhibition in herself or their selves. Miss Sally Marks' graceful equestrian act was enlivened by the novel lokes and humor of Johnny Patterson, the famous Irish clown, who has successfully divorcing himself entirely from the stale acts and staler wit of the standard circus clown. Geo. E. Drew introduced something new in the shape of a Hebrew clown, and made a big hit. Francois Kennebel, the great French clown, was very comical, and kept the audience in an uproar. The tumbling by the company of athletes was excellent, each performer appearing as star in his line. They were followed by Millie Tournour's great aerial act, one of the cleverest bits of trapeze gracefulness ever seen in a circus arena. Miss Tournour was enthusiastically applauded. Miss Ella Stokes is one of the most dashing and graceful bareback-riders in the world, and was received with loud applause. Willie Showles asserted beyond a doubt his right to the title of "champion bareback horseman of America" by his wonderful riding and athletic performance in the ring. Mr. Doris has indeed secured a drawing card in his engagement of Mr. Showles. The Seigrist Brothers' acrobatic performance, Satsuma's juggling, and the lightning hurdle-act of Showles were all excellent and duly appreciated, while the act of the great and original Zazel completely "caught the house." To begin with, Zazel is a "daisy"—pretty, lively, finely formed, and withal the very queen of performers. Everyone must be captivated by her thoroughly artistic act. On the tight wire she is gracefulness itself, while her "human cannon-ball" performance, in which she is shot from the mouth of a huge cannon across the tent and into a receiving net, is more than worth the seeing. Zazel is but the star of a company of stars, and Mr. Doris has secured in them all the elements of the best of entertainments. We can thoroughly endorse the opinions of the press everywhere that Doris' show is first-class. The members of the local press are especially indebted to Press agent Hines for his many courtesies, and congratulate Mr. Doris in the possession of his efficient services.—Daily American, Lawrence, Mass., Aug. 2.

THE INTEROCEAN SHOW.—John B. Doris' Interocean Show, which exhibited here yesterday afternoon and evening before large and enthusiastic audiences, is deserving of warm words of praise. From beginning to end the entertainment is neat, clean and thoroughly enjoyable in every respect, from the moment of the grand entree to the final shooting of Zazel from the huge cannon suspended in midair. There was but one ring, to be sure, but it proved a decided relief from the cross-eyed efforts to watch a three-ring performance, such as is presented at the Barnum and Forepaugh Shows. We have not space to describe the really fine performances of all the different members of the company, but cannot refrain from complimenting Millie Christine, the two-headed lady, who appeared in songs and dances. The acrobatic feats of the Seigrist and Rice Brothers cannot be better. Mlle Tourpour, the aerial queen; Willie Showles, the daring bareback rider; Sally Marks, a neat little bareback-rider; Miss Ella Stokes, a wonderful and graceful rider; and Zazel, who is immense in her high wire, leap for life, and "human cannon-ball" specialties. The remaining three great clowns—the great Johnny Patterson, the original Irish clown and humorist; Geo. E. Drew, original Hebrew clown; and Francois Kennebel, the great French trick-clown. Another feature connected with the "Interocean" is also deserving of compliment, viz., the courteous treatment of the press by Geo. H. Hines, the genial press-agent. He is a gentleman in every sense of the word, and is fully the equal of Thomas of the Barnum and Lawrence of the Forepaugh Show, both of whom are considered the finest press-agents in the country. Mr. Doris and his company have left a fine reputation in Salem, and we hope the show will visit Salem again and bring a larger tent, as they will have use for it.—The Daily Post, Salem, Mass., Aug. 4, 1883.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE OPENING of a Summer Theatre and Museum in Rochester, N. Y., by W. C. Coup and Fred Levantine, was at first looked upon by the citizens as apt to meet with failure. It was the fourth and closing entertainment of the series, and, like those preceding it, merited and received generous praise. DEATHS IN THE PROFESSION.

Continued from page 339.

HIRAM ORTON, father of Miles Orton, the well-known circus-manager, died suddenly of heart-disease in Norris, Mich., Aug. 2, aged 72 years. Mr. Orton was for many years one of the leading showmen of the country, having been connected during his managerial career with many of the largest circus and managerie enterprises. Several years ago he retired from active business to a comfortable farm near Norris, which he successfully worked up to the time of his death. Miles Orton was in Hudson, Wis., at the time of his father's decease, and was telegraphed for; but on account of the present unreliability of telegraphic business he did not receive the sad news until the night of 3. He arrived at Norris 4, and took charge of the remains. Deceased desired to be buried with Masonic rites, but the remains having been held so long awaiting the son's arrival it was not deemed advisable to incur the further delay which the arrangement for a Masonic funeral would necessitate. Accordingly, the funeral took place in Norris Sunday afternoon, Aug. 5, and the remains were taken by train to Detroit, Mich., and interred in Elmwood Cemetery.

HENRY MORGAN, actor, died in San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 4. See "Latest News by Telegraph."

For Latest News by Telegraph see page 334.

"PUCK ON WHEELS," No. 4, once more wheels into line for the amusement of holiday-idlers and the relaxation of the hard-working stay-at-home crowd, too. The breezy-looking picture on the first page of the cover would indicate that our modern Robin Goodfellow finds it's necessary to take the water-route this Summer, probably because the showery propensities of the season make it difficult to navigate his jokes over the less yielding element—land. We find, however, that, notwithstanding the aqueous suggestiveness of the frontis-piece, the book is full of solid fun, written and pictured, and our readers can enjoy it all by investing 25 cents with the publishers, Messrs. Keppler & Schwarzmann, New York, or at any news-stand.

A CHEAP EDITION of the Waverley novels is being published by T. B. Peterson of Philadelphia. They intend to complete the work in twenty-six weekly volumes, at 15 cents each, or $3 for the work complete.

THE GUY FAMILY
Our old New York favorite Baritone and Comic Vocalist
GEORGE GUY, SENIOR
(FATHER AND PROPRIETOR), are presenting the most enjoyable entertainments through the British Provinces ever presented before any audience, consisting of Petite Operas, Comedies, Farces and Pantomimes.
The halls are not large enough to hold the people. A continual roar of laughter and applause from the rise to the fall of the curtain. Everything so good and chaste, and works like clockwork. GEO. ROBERT GUY is decidedly the best Dutch comedian and second to none living, and as a negro delineator and dancer he is unexcelled. His bone-solo is immense, let alone his flower-pot and toy-fantasias. MR. CHAS. W. GUY bids fair to take the lead as one of the best clowns on the stage. He is funny. ALBERT EDWARD GUY in his gentlemanly acting and his solos on the alto-trombone, triple-tonguеing and execution of the most difficult operatic airs is surprising—the best of musicians. LITTLE ARTHUR LEOPOLD GUY is truly a wonderful child. His lightning changes are so neatly finished, and his songs-and-dances so unique. EDWIN FRANCIS GUY, an eccentric of the highest calibre. A great feature of the entertainment is the gymnastic exercises, the double horizontal-bars, and the muscular developments of Messrs. Still B. Call, Paridi Papanti and Chas. W. Guy, pronounced by all as the finest athletes of the times, coupled with single, double and triple club juggling and swinging and balancing hard to beat. This family is music from the father, the mother, the daughter, to the youngest. There are six sons and one daughter (MISS MIAMI GUY, a charming actress), and the gentlemen artists who make up the orchestra and band consist of fifteen people. They have a circuit of 1,200 towns. Their street-band enjoy an enviable reputation. It should be remembered that George R. Guy and Willie Guy were formerly known as the Guy Brothers, and are the oldest youngest performers on the minstrel stage, Willie having retired from the stage, and George is known as G. R. Guy, the Dutch and Negro Comedian. They were formerly with old George Christy, Campbells, Hooley, Kelly & Leon's, etc., and have traveled through England, Ireland, Wales, West Indies, British Provinces and Canadas and the United States, and hope at no distant period to be seen in their own native city—New York. Good musicians (gentlemen) can always find a good situation with this talented family. Address care of CLIPPER. 21-1t*

Managers holding contracts with BARRY & FAY are requested to note clause in contract wherein B. & F. reserve the right to cancel engagements where they have been preceded or are to be followed by any party presenting any play or sketch called "Muldoon's Picnic," all such being weak imitations, and intended to deceive the public.

THE MINSTRELS AT REDMOND'S.—As a matter of course, Thatcher, Primrose & West's Minstrels last night drew a first class house; in fact, every seat in the house was taken, and standing-room was at a premium.—GRAND RAPIDS DEMOCRAT, Tuesday, July 31.

GRAND—MINSTRELSY.—Since George Primrose and William West separated from Barlow & Wilson's Minstrels and united forces with George Thatcher, the organization known as Thatcher, Primrose & West's Minstrels has frequently visited Detroit. On each occasion there has been a notable improvement, not only in the size of the houses, but in the merits of the performances. Last night these minstrels appeared at Whitney's Grand Opera-house to an audience which packed the theatre and caused such a crush at the door that the curtain was not rung up until after a delay of a quarter of an hour.—DETROIT POST AND TRIBUNE, Wednesday, Aug. 1.

At the Academy of Music last night, Thatcher, Primrose & West's Minstrels celebrated the first anniversary of the organization of the company. It was a splendid audience to which they played, and an excellent performance which they gave. Long before eight o'clock the entrance to the Academy was crowded. In front of the box-office was such a jam as has seldom been seen about the handsome theatre. Three or four policemen kept the crowd in comparative order, while Treasurer Kuhn worked as he never worked before, and disposed of tickets with a rapidity which astonished even the Meech Brothers. Several hundred turned away when they saw the rush, but enough were left. At eight o'clock every seat was occupied, and soon all the standing room was filled. It was a thoroughly pleased crowd, remaining until the curtain was rung down on the last burlesque, leaving Billy Rice's body in uncomfortable quarters.—BUFFALO EXPRESS, Saturday, Aug. 4.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC—THATCHER, PRIMROSE & WEST'S MINSTRELS.—It is quite refreshing to chronicle a performance of such genuine merit and originality as that given by Thatcher, Primrose & West's Consolidated Minstrels in the Academy of Music last evening. Every seat in the house was occupied, standing-room was at a discount, and hundreds were turned away unable to gain admission. It was certainly one of the largest and best pleased audiences that have assembled within the walls of the Academy in some time.—BUFFALO COURIER, Saturday, Aug. 4.
